LANDS IN BOX ELDER COUNTY, UTAH

The bill (H. R. 15328) to authorize the exchange of 18 sections of Government land for an equal value of State land located in Box Elder County, Utah, for experiments in sheep growing, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I note that according to the title of the bill this is a measure to exchange 18 sections of Government land for an equal value of State land. How is that value to be determined? It seems to me it should be "an equal area."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] made the report on this bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Utah? Inquiry is made with reference to H. R. 15328, Order of Business No. 1705, authorizing the exchange of 18 sections of land within Box Elder County, Utah, for an equal value of State land. It is a House bill. The author of the bill, the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill in the House [Mr. COLTON], and the Senator from Utah came before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. As I recall, the bill authorizes the exchange of certain lands located within a game refuge in Utah for lands on the outside, the two tracts to be of equal value. I think that is correct.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Is it to be an exchange of 18 sections for another 18 sections?

Mr. BRATTON. No; land of equal value.

Mr. JONES. The title does not read that way. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill. It says, "to authorize the exchange of 18 sections of Government land for an equal value of State land." It does not say "an equal area," but "an equal value."

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest adding that amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. That is the usual way in which these exchanges are authorized. That is, the Government land is simply exchanged for other land of equal value, regardless of area. The Secretary of the Interior will be required to ascertain and determine whether the State land offered in exchange is of equal value.

Mr. JONES. I think most of these exchange acts have provided for an equal area of land and equal value.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, suppose the equal area of land is not of equal value: How are you going to get around that obstacle?

Mr. JONES. You would have to find an equal area somewhere that is of equal value. I can not understand how they are going to determine the equal value of the lands to be received in exchange for these 18 sections.

Mr. BRATTON. By an actual examination of the land; and if the 18 sections offered are of less value than the Government land, the Secretary will require that more land be tendered. In other words, the State must offer enough land to equal in value the 18 sections described in the bill.

Mr. JONES. But is a body of appraisers provided for by the bill to determine the equal value, or is that to be left to some examiner of the Interior Department?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. My recollection of preceding bills of a similar character is this language is substantially the same, and the discretion has been exercised by the Secretary of the Interior in determining the value. As a matter of fact, where these exchanges have been authorized the Senator will recall that they are usually lands that have but little value—perhaps a dollar and a quarter per acre, or thereabouts. They are unused lands nonmineral in character; and in order to consolidate the holdings of the Government it oftentimes desires to make exchanges and get an equivalent amount of land, so far as possible, from private individuals or from the State.

Mr. JONES. Of course the lands of the State probably will not be consolidated, because the State generally does not have its land in a consolidated area, does it?

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that under the grant to the State under the enabling act there was some of those townships or sections where perhaps there would not be 18 sections in one compact body. I am not quite sure as to that. There has been no difficulty experienced in the past in the exchanges which have been authorized.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is acquainted with the situation and what is sought to be done?

Mr. KING. Yes; and it has been approved by the Interior Department and by the officials of the State.

Mr. JONES. I shall not object.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINERS' HOSPITALS, UTAH AND ARIZONA

The bill (H. R. 15732) making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, after line 3, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That in addition to the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. L.), for miners' hospitals for disabled miners, there is hereby granted to the State of Arizona, subject to all the conditions and limitations contained in said act, 50,000 acres of land for miners' hospitals for disabled miners within said State, said land to be selected from the surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, and nonmineral lands of the United States within the limits of said State, in the manner provided by said act approved June 20, 1910.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the provisions made by the act of Congress approved July 16, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 110), for a miners' hospital for disabled miners, there is hereby granted to the State of Utah, subject to all the conditions and limitations of the original grant, an additional 50,000 acres for a miners' hospital for disabled miners to be selected by the State, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from vacant nonmineral surveyed unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Utah and not to include lands that are likely to be needed hereafter for inclusion in Federal reclamation or national park projects.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. L.), for miners' hospitals for disabled miners, there is hereby granted to the State of Arizona, subject to all the conditions and limitations contained in said act, 50,000 acres of land for miners' hospitals for disabled miners within said State, said land to be selected from the surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, and nonmineral lands of the United States within the limits of said State, in the manner provided by said act approved June 20, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have learned very much about legislation in the past week, and about the ways in which benefits are secured for our States. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona to tell us why this bill is limited to the States of Utah and Arizona?

I noticed that the bill was introduced in the House by a representative from Utah [Mr. COLTON] and provided for a donation of 50,000 acres for a miners' hospital in Utah. In the Senate committee it was amended, and reported out by the Senator from Arizona, to provide 50,000 acres for a miners' hospital in Arizona. We do not have on the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys any of the Senators from Pennsylvania; but we have miners in my State, Mr. President, hundreds of thousands of them, for whom the State of Pennsylvania has built miners' hospitals, I think about 12 in all. They are maintained by State appropriations, and not paid for by grants of public land by the United States. In Virginia, in Maryland, in West Virginia, in Ohio, in Indiana, in Illinois——

Mr. ASHURST. In New York.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; not New York—there are hundreds of thousands of miners. Why do we limit the benefits of this legislation to Utah and Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the question is a tribute to the Senator's power of observation and his pungency of mind.

When Pennsylvania was admitted, when she became a State, all her lands were available for her people except a few post-office sites, sites for other Federal buildings, and a few acres for docks and arsenals. All the area of that vast domain was available to the people. When, however, Utah was admitted 60 per cent—the able junior Senator from that State will correct me if I am wrong—50 or 60 per cent of the domain of that State was held by the strong arm of the Federal Government, not to be taxed to assist in supporting a State, not to be taxed or used in building up a State; but, although the Federal Government's strong arm had taken half the area of Arizona and more than half the area of Utah and two-thirds of the area of Idaho, the Federal Government said, when it passed the enabling acts admitting them into the Union, "Inasmuch as we have taken a very large part of the area of your State, we will condescend to give you a few hundred thousand acres for State institutions."

So when Utah was admitted in 1896 these various State institutions, like the capitol, the penitentiary, the asylum for the insane, and the miners' hospital were granted so many acres of land; but the grant to Utah for her miners' hospital was only 50,000 acres.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me finish, please. Utah was admitted in 1896; and the fund that she has derived from her 50,000 acres during all these years is only about $80,000.

Arizona was admitted in 1912, with 50,000 acres, and the fund that she has derived for the miners' hospital is only $1,504 a year. So Utah and Arizona very properly say, "We wish first to have the appropriation of land for our State miners' hospital increased to the amount for the other State institutions, 100,000 acres."

The other States have not asked it, because they have had their 100,000 acres. Pennsylvania has no complaint to make, because the Federal Government did not withhold her lands when she was admitted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania is not complaining. Pennsylvania is just seeking information. Will the Senator tell me who pays the operating expenses of these hospitals?

Mr. ASHURST. The State.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is not done by Federal appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. No, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act making an additional grant of lands for miners' hospitals for disabled miners of the States of Utah and Arizona, and for other purposes."

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to emphasize the importance of what the Senator from Arizona has said with regard to the inequality on the part of the so-called public-land States as contrasted with States having their full territorial area subject to taxation.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania and those of like mind will surrender the public lands to the States in which they are located, we gladly shall absolve the Government from any obligation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Are not those lands available now for homestead entries and for mining entries?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not that return them or deliver them to the control of the States?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, no. They are not subject to taxation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. After they have been entered on?

Mr. BRATTON. After a homesteader has resided upon his entry the required time, and the land is patented, and the title thus passed, it becomes subject to taxation; but until that time the State is barred from receiving any income whatsoever from it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to my friend from Utah.

Mr. KING. May I say, in response to the question propounded by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that a very large percentage indeed—perhaps 80 or 90 or more per cent—of the remaining unoccupied nonmineral lands of the United States within the so-called public-land States are not susceptible of cultivation. No man could go upon those lands and carve out of them 160 acres or more than 500 acres, according to the enlarged homestead act, and make a living on them. That would be impossible. The only purpose that most of the lands can serve is for sheep grazing and cattle grazing; and it would be necessary to have an enormous area to graze a very small number of sheep or cattle. They do have some value for those purposes. Many of the lands of the State of Utah and some of the other Western States acquired under their enabling acts as grants from the Government were sold by the States for $1.25 an acre.

These lands in the State of Utah that would under this act be carved out of the public domain probably would not be worth more than $1.25 or $2 an acre at the most, and that for sheep-grazing purposes. So the people will not go upon the land.

They can not get title; they can not comply with any law. Of course, if there are minerals there, then people may go on the land and locate mining claims.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have many times gone on record as favoring the delivery of all the Federal lands in those States to the States themselves. I believe that the Federal Government ought to surrender its proprietary ownership over those public lands. I hope that in the not distant future we may see that accomplished. My feeling in regard to the matter is not wholly out of generosity to the States, because I believe that the Federal ownership of a lot of nonproductive land in Western States is used as a basis for appropriations that would otherwise be indefensible.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I only wanted to add my voice to the opinion which has been expressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I hope to see the time come in the not distant future when the Western States will have the lands within their borders assigned to them for their own purposes. Personally, I have never been able to see the justification for the Federal Government retaining these enormous amounts of land in the Western States, and I shall be very glad to aid the Senator from New Mexico, or any other Senator, in securing what I conceive to be justice for the Western States in that regard.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Pennsylvania express those sentiments. This is a subject to which I have given much thought. I think those lands should be ceded to the States. All the States in the Union should be on an equal footing, and I can not see that they are on an equal footing when one has the power to tax and receive income from all of the lands within its borders, and another is deprived of that right in respect to a part of the lands within its boundaries.

During the next session of the Congress I intend to introduce and push as expeditiously as I am able to do a bill to cede all of the public lands to the States in which they are located.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have such a bill pending before the committee now. I introduced a bill of like character when I was a Member of the House of Representatives, and at every session of Congress since I have been in the Senate, since 1917, I have presented a bill for the cession of the public lands to the States within which those lands are found.

In the Senate I have always found a very sympathetic feeling toward the measures to which I have referred. When Senator Cummins was in the Senate, he expressed himself repeatedly in favor of my measure, and said that it would be better for the Federal Government financially to get rid of the public lands and cede them to the States.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, may I ask what the possession of such land by the United States amounts to in the way of taxes to a State, for instance, like New Mexico? The kind of land the Senator from Utah has described seems to have very little value. What would it mean in the way of taxes?

Mr. BRATTON. The income to the State will be increased by whatever sum the taxes aggregate, because under the present situation the respective States receive no income whatever from the public lands.

Mr. SACKETT. Lands of that character, which people will not even enter and become proprietors of, can not yield very much.

Mr. BRATTON. They can be used for grazing livestock and similar purposes. They would be worth as much to the State as they are to the Government, so that their value would not be a proper element in considering whether they should be ceded to the States. They rightfully belong to the States, regardless of their value. The Senator's State has the right to exercise sovereignty over all lands within her borders, to tax them, and to receive tribute from them. My State does not enjoy that privilege. So the two States are not on an equal footing, and equality of privilege and prerogative on the part of the several States is a fundamental part of our system of government.

I desire to say to my friend from Utah that during the next session of Congress I shall join him in urging the passage of a bill; that is to say, appropriate legislation, to bring about the cession of the public lands to the States in which they are located.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make one observation to my friend from Kentucky?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Kentucky that when these lands pass into private hands some improvements are made, wells are frequently dug, and houses and sheds are erected, so that the lands take on an additional value when they pass out of the hands of the Government into the hands of private individuals.

Mr. SACKETT. The land could pass now under the homestead act.

Mr. KING. Only in limited amounts.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, what is before the Senate?

Mr. BRATTON. Conversation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION

The bill (S. 5684) to amend the War Finance Corporation act approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide for the liquidation of the assets and the winding up of the affairs of the War Finance Corporation after April 4, 1929, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Finance Corporation act of April 5, 1918, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so that at the close of April 4, 1929, the liquidation of the assets remaining at that time and the winding up of the affairs of the corporation thereafter shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, who for such purpose shall have all the powers and duties of the board of directors of the corporation under said act, as amended. For carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury may assign to any officer or officers of the United States in the Treasury Department the exercise and performance, under his general supervision and direction, of any such powers and duties. He shall from time to time pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts any moneys belonging to the corporation which, in his opinion, are not required for carrying on and completing the liquidation of its remaining assets and the winding up of its affairs, including reasonable provision for the further expenses thereof. Nothing in the said act, as amended, or this act, shall be construed to affect any right or privilege accrued, any penalty or liability incurred, any criminal or civil proceeding commenced, or any authority conferred thereunder, except as herein provided in connection with the liquidation of the remaining assets and the winding up of the affairs of the said corporation, until the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that such liquidation will no longer be advantageous to the United States and that all of its lawful obligations have been met, whereupon he shall retire any capital stock then outstanding, pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts the unused balance of the moneys belonging to the corporation, and make the final report of the corporation to the Congress. Thereupon the corporation shall be deemed to be dissolved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. STOCKETT

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement with reference to an item in the military appropriation bill, passed yesterday.

There was an item regarding John W. Stockett, which was embraced in an amendment which I offered, and which was incorporated in the bill. A bill carrying the same item had previously passed the Senate, had gone to the House, and had been amended, and a conference had been asked, which was not granted for a long period of time. It finally was granted, but the last attempt at a hearing was delayed by the application of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who was ill and could not attend, and who desired to have an opportunity to consider the bill. In so far as any delay in the matter of considering the item in conference is concerned, the Senator from Nebraska was only asking for time in which to examine into the matter. In the meantime I took the course of presenting the matter to the Senate again as an amendment to the military appropriation bill.

I make this statement in justice to the Senator from Nebraska, so that it may be known that he was in no manner responsible for any of the delays touching the consideration of the matter.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

The bill (S. 4577) to amend section 29 of the Federal farm loan act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let the bill go over. I want to make a speech on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES J. HUNT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business No. 1663, House bill 10327, for the relief of Charles J. Hunt. When the bill was reached on the calendar the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected, and he has kindly consented to withdraw his objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FARM LOAN ACT TO PORTO RICO

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the other day when Senate bill 5302, to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, was reached on the calendar, it was objected to by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. He has since looked into the matter, and has withdrawn his objection. I now ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the bill, which grants to Porto Rico the same rights and the same limit with regard to farm loans as apply to the States.

May I say that I am informed by the officials of the Farm Loan Board that the Porto Rican branch of the farm loan bank, in Baltimore, is one of the best banks in the United States, that its record for paying its debts and for meeting its obligations is second to none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, to strike out "$15,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$25,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $25,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT BUILDING COMMISSION

Mr. KEYES. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds Senate Joint Resolution 213, to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress. I am sure there will be no opposition, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the submission to the Congress of preliminary plans and estimates of costs for the construction of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States," approved December 21, 1928, is amended by striking out "March 1, 1929," and inserting in lieu thereof "the first day of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANVILLE M. AND DOROTHY M. PEARSON

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 304, submitted by Mr. DALE January 23, 1929, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1928, to Granville M. Pearson and Dorothy M. Pearson, son and daughter, respectively, of Granville W. Pearson, late an employee of the Senate under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. JONES. Is that according to precedent?

Mr. DENEEN. The time of service was 39½ years. The policy is to grant one year's pay where the employee has served 25 years.

The resolution was agreed to.

NELLIE C. BOND ROOT

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 307, submitted by Mr. GREENE January 26, 1929, reported it without amendment, and it was considered, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Nellie C. Bond Root, daughter of George H. Bond, late an employee of the Senate under direction of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. DENEEN. According to the notation, the service was for 39 years.

Mr. KING. What was the character of the service?

Mr. DENEEN. It is stated in the resolution as messenger.

The resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF ELECTION OF SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA, 1926

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 310, submitted by Mr. SHORTRIDGE January 28, 1929, reported it without amendment, and it was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 68, agreed to on December 17, 1927, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the election of a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania in 1926, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress.

KATHARINE NICHOLS CONNER

Mr. DEENEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 318, submitted by Mr. MCKELLAR January 30, 1929, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay to Katharine Nichols Conner, widow of John W. Conner, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, under direction of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported a resolution (S. Res. 325), which was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventieth and Seventy-first Congresses to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, whether there has been a report made on the bill relating to the board of visitors to the Philippine Islands, which has been before the committee for some months.

Mr. DENEEN. Action on that bill, and four others, went over to the next meeting of the committee.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I send to the desk a very interesting and able article by Representative TILSON, the Republican leader of the House, in regard to apportionment bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, February 3, 1929]

WANTS NO INCREASE OF HOUSE MEMBERS—IN FACT, THE REPUBLICAN FLOOR LEADER BELIEVES WE COULD DO WITH FEWER REPRESENTATIVES—URGES REAPPORTIONMENT—BILL RECENTLY PASSED MEETS ALL NEEDS OF THE SITUATION, MR. TILSON DECLARES

By JOHN Q. TILSON, Republican leader of the House of Representatives

It is provided in the Constitution that every 10 years the membership of the House of Representatives shall be reapportioned among the several States according to population, and this was done after each decennial census up to and including the census of 1910. After the census of 1920 had been taken an effort was made to reapportion under it, but without success. More than eight years have since elapsed. Numerous attempts have been made to obtain action, but the problem remains unsolved.

There is serious danger that 1930 will come and go without a reapportionment. The time has come, therefore, when this problem should be brought to the attention of the country in such a way as to call forth an active public sentiment on behalf of a question which strikes to the very roots of our form of popular government. Strange as it may seem, comparatively few people have paid the slightest attention to it, although to the credit of the press of the country it must be said that a very considerable number of newspapers have consistently urged reapportionment. Unfortunately many of these, however, have been content to abuse Congress for inaction instead of helping to arouse a public interest that could not be resisted by Congress. Three times the question has been considered in the House apparently without arousing public interest except in the few sections like southern California and Michigan, where the present inequalities are greatest. In fact, the average person outside of these two States does not appear to fully realize the danger that confronts us if the constitutional provision for a reapportionment every 10 years is persistently ignored.

SHOULD REPRESENT POPULATION

Truly representative government in this country will cease to exist unless the membership of the House of Representatives shall with some degree of accuracy represent the population. Under the Constitution the Senate is established to represent the several States, while the function of the House is to represent the population. In theory, each Member of the House is supposed to speak for an equal number of people, so that a majority of this body will represent a majority of the people, regardless of State lines.

As the country grows there is a continuous redistribution of the population. Our forefathers wisely foresaw that only by reapportionment at frequent intervals could the House of Representatives be maintained as a truly representative body. The men who drafted the Constitution doubtless had in their minds the conditions which through a long period of years had gradually grown up in England under the so-called "rotten borough" system, which was still growing worse when our Constitution was written. Many members of Parliament represented districts in which there were but a handful of people, and as a result Parliament was dominated by the great landowners, who in many instances literally owned the so-called "rotten boroughs."

Since 1910, owing to the Great War and other influences, there has been a very pronounced and well-recognized redistribution of population in the United States, so that the failure of Congress to reapportion on the basis of the 1920 census carried us perceptibly in the direction of inequality in popular representation among the States, which inevitably leads toward the "rotten borough" system. The present decade will doubtless carry us further in the same direction. I do not believe that the Republic is in imminent danger of disruption or disintegration on account of the steps already taken in a wrong direction, because I believe that we will promptly retrace these steps; but as leader of the responsible majority in the House I deem it my duty to call attention to and give warning of any danger that might seriously threaten our democratic institutions.

THREE VOTES IN AS MANY YEARS

Since 1921 many Members of Congress and others have felt uncomfortable on account of the failure of Congress to perform a perfectly plain duty under the Constitution. When I became floor leader of the House at the beginning of the Sixty-ninth Congress I began to cast about for some method by which failure to perform this duty for the future might be prevented. I called in my colleague, Mr. FENN, the chairman of the Committee on the Census, and suggested to him the plan of an anticipatory law fixing the membership of the House and providing a method for the proper allocation by the Secretary of Commerce, as a purely ministerial duty, of the fixed number of Representatives among the several States according to the population as determined by the 1930 census. For the last three years the Committee on the Census has been working on the details of such a bill. During this time on three different occasions the House of Representatives has been brought to a vote on the question.

On January 11 the House finally passed a bill fixing the membership of the House at 435, the present membership, and providing that this number shall be allotted to the several States in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution as applied to the census taken in 1930. If there were no direct reference to the matter in the bill itself, it goes without saying that action by the next Congress would supersede any action taken by this Congress; but in order to avoid even the appearance of attempting to limit the freedom of action of the next Congress the pending bill specifically provides that it is to go into effect only if and when the next Congress fails to make a reapportionment under the 1930 census. In other words, such legislation now will serve as a guaranty that either the next Congress will act as it is in duty bound to act or in default of such action the provisions of the present bill will automatically become effective.

As this is written the bill that passed the House is awaiting action in the Senate, and it is hoped that sufficient interest will be aroused throughout the country to impress upon that body the grave importance of enacting this bill into law before the end of the present Congress.

AVOIDING LARGER MEMBERSHIP

The fundamental reason for the failure to reapportion after the 1920 census was because of the considerable increase in membership carried in the bill that passed the House at that time. In this the House was only copying the bad example set by previous Congresses following the census for the last five decennial periods in attempting to fix the size of the House so as to prevent States from losing any part of their representation. After the Ninth Census the membership of the House was increased from 243 to 293; after the Tenth Census to 332; after the Eleventh to 357; after the Twelfth to 391; and after the Thirteenth Census (1910) to 435.

The veteran Representative and Senator, THEODORE E. BURTON, on December 15 last, for the second time left the House to enter the Senate. In his farewell remarks he warned the House against further increases in its membership. He referred to the three occasions during his service in Congress when the size of the House was increased in order to prevent certain States losing representation and reminded us that on each of these occasions the increase was made with the distinct promise that the membership should not be increased again.

After the changes in the seating arrangements of the House made necessary by the addition of nearly 50 Members following the 1910 census had been carried out and the inevitable effects of an increasingly unwieldy body began to make themselves felt, a decided sentiment against further increase began to make itself felt both in and out of Congress so that the proposed increase following the 1920 census was not generally acceptable, and this was the real cause for the failure to reapportion at that time. An additional reason or excuse advanced at the time was that the census taken early in 1920, so soon after the great disturbance caused by the war, did not accurately reflect the permanent distribution of the population as between rural and urban communities. This, however, of itself would not have been sufficient to prevent reapportionment had it not been for the firmly grounded and growing sentiment against further increase in the size of the House.

It is argued that the number of Representatives should keep pace with the increase in population, so that a Member of Congress would always represent about the same number of people. Such a proposal is neither sound nor practicable. If this policy had been followed from the First Census down to the present time, we should now have a House of Representatives numbering between three and four thousand Members, which would be a grotesque absurdity.

Others argue that the membership of the House should increase rapidly enough at least to take care of the additional Members from the most rapidly growing States, so that no State should ever lose in the number of its Representatives. During the last 50 years this argument has prevailed in almost every instance. The difficulty is that the difference in the rate of growth between some of the older States and some of the newer or more rapidly growing States is so great that the House would need to be enlarged by about 50 Members every 10 years in order to take up the increase. Such an increase every 10 years would be, in my judgment, little short of a public calamity.

HOUSE TOO LARGE NOW

The House should not be further increased. It is already too large. If it were practicable to reduce it considerably under 400, I should favor it; but this is not practicable. It is a difficult task to prevent it growing larger, and if the pending bill should fail in the Senate I doubt whether it would be possible to prevent an increase in membership in case there should be reapportionment at all.

Many of those who have watched and studied the growing difficulties of an increasingly unwieldy membership are determined not to be a party to a further increase if it can be prevented; and many prefer no apportionment at all if this is the only alternative. Either result would be a great misfortune, and yet this is the dilemma that may confront Congress in case the decennial census period should again pass without previous legislation. When the 1930 census shall have been taken and it is figured out just the number of Representatives each State will lose under a reapportionment, it will be far more difficult than it now is to secure legislation having this result. The pending bill, if enacted into law, would cure the effects of inaction, but only by the sound judgment of the next Congress prevailing over personal interest and State pride can the further increase in the House be prevented in case any action whatever is taken.

The examples of foreign parliamentary bodies are cited in favor of a larger membership. It is true that most of the parliaments of the world are larger than our House of Representatives and many countries have relatively larger legislative bodies as measured by total population. The composition of most of these bodies, however, and the nature of the function they serve in government are so different from our own Congress that there is practically no analogy.

In the British House of Commons there are about 650 members, but their system of government is so different from our own that no criterion for comparison exists. The rank and file of the members of that body attend only on extraordinary occasions. The heads of the several executive departments are also the leaders in Parliament and practically control all legislation. A quorum in the House of Commons is 100, while 40 is a quorum in the committee of the whole. Less than one-third of the total membership could find seats if by any unforeseen chance they should all happen to visit Parliament House at one time.

The French Chamber of Deputies is in no accurate sense comparable with the House of Representatives. It functions quite differently. Its large membership is made up of many different party blocs which on most occasions are voted en masse by their respective leaders without the necessity of the presence of individual members.

WOULD REQUIRE NEW SYSTEM

The example of other legislative bodies might be cited, but, as I have said, none of them may properly serve as a criterion by which to judge or with which to compare our own House of Representatives. Do we desire our House of Representatives to develop into the character of the legislative bodies above indicated or, for that matter, any other which might be cited? Such a development would completely change our system of government.

The House of Representatives is a deliberative body. It is and is designed to be representative of the people themselves, who are the real sovereigns under our system of government. Each Member here is in fact, as in theory, equal in power and equal in responsibility, except as one Member or another may be clothed by his colleagues with temporary power or authority for the public good or for the convenience of all, and then entirely subject always to the will of a majority of the House. The entire membership of the House, theoretically and actually, participates in legislation and it is to be hoped that the House will never become so large as to make this difficult or impossible.

Upon the demand of any one Member of the House of Representatives more than one-half the entire membership must be present before the most trifling item of business may be transacted. If it were not for this wholesome provision of the Constitution, it is quite probable that we, too, should find a smaller attendance even upon roll calls than is now the case. The present tendency is that as the House increases in size the percentage of habitual absenteeism also increases. It would be far better to have a smaller total membership with a higher percentage of regular attendance.

Worst of all, there is an element of justification for the absence of Members during sessions of the House in the fact that even with the present size of the House there is considerable difficulty in understandingly transacting business if the entire membership is actually present.

The limit has been reached in the size of the House, so that further increase in membership means either less efficiency or, worse still, a gradual but complete change in the character of the function to be performed by the House. It is not a good time in the history of our political development for such a change. It can be prevented, or at any rate stopped where it now is, by fixing for the time being the limit of membership where it now is, and this the bill now pending in the Senate will make certain. It is to be hoped that nothing may prevent its passage by that body before the end of the present Congress.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 11, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, February 9, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With Thee, our Heavenly Father, as our ever-present help, the fine fidelities of service shall prevail. Thy sovereignty takes up all human choices and deeds and shapes them into Thy eternal purpose. Oh, bless us with a nobler self-hood, enriched from Thy infinite fullness. Not less of life, but life that is more abundant, for this we ask. Stay with us in famine and in plenty, in sickness and in health. Fortify us with Thy wisdom, stimulate us with Thy love, then we shall rejoice and triumph in Thee. Thy mercy is no desert stream that loses itself in the sands, but it widens and deepens in the breadth of the vastness of the infinite ocean. Glory be to Thee, O Lord, Most High. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 14479. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio; and

H. Con. Res. 46. Concurrent resolution amending section 6 of the House concurrent resolution establishing the United States Yorktown Sesquicentennial Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 15712. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 349) entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, and Mr. COPELAND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELECTORAL VOTES

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 5, 1929.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: According to the provisions of section 2 of the act approved May 29, 1928, the Secretary of State of the United States shall receive from each State two certificates relating to the presidential election. One certificate is that of the final ascertainment of electors of President and Vice President. The other certificate is that of the electors themselves and the law provides that to that certificate there shall be attached a copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of electors of President and Vice President.

Your attention is called to the fact that the State of Mississippi, although it has sent in the second certificate, together with a copy of the first certificate properly certified by the governor, has not transmitted a separate certificate of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President as provided by the act.

For your information there is inclosed a photostat copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of President and Vice President which was appended to the certificate of the electors as described above. It may be added that the department, under date of January 22, 1929, called the attention of the Governor of Mississippi to the fact that the certificate of final ascertainment had not been received by the department, but no reply has yet been received to this communication.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF THE COMMISSIONED AND ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY, NAVY, ETC.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 12032, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 12032, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the amendment. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The Clerk read the Senate amendment.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The Senate amendment was agreed to.

RELIEF OF THOMAS W. MOORE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 13097, a bill for the relief of Thomas W. Moore, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 13097, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the same. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The Clerk read the Senate amendment.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The Senate amendment was agreed to.

COMPACTS OR AGREEMENTS BETWEEN VARIOUS STATES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 6496, granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Oklahoma with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Cimarron River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; House bill 6497, granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, Pecos, and Canadian or Red Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; House bill 6499, granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Arizona with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Gila and San Francisco Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; House bill 7024, granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and New Mexico with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, San Juan, and Las Animas Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; House bill 7025, granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Oklahoma, and Kansas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Arkansas River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested, and disagree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill, with the Senate amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not proper to call up these bills one at a time?

The SPEAKER. They will be reported to the House one at a time. The Clerk will report House bill 6496, with the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, as I understand it the gentleman's request is only to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Idaho is that the Senate amendment be disagreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anything here which pertains to the Columbia River Basin project?

Mr. SMITH. Nothing at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill, H. R. 6497, with the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the gentleman is taking this course by direction of the committee?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; by direction of the committee.

Mr. GARBER. What is the effect of the Senate amendment?

Mr. SMITH. The Senate amendment provides that the officer to represent the Federal Government in connection with these deliberations with the State commissions shall be appointed without limitations, while the House bill provides that the representative shall be appointed from the Department of the Interior. We think some one could be detailed from the Department of the Interior and thus save the expense of having an individual from private life as could be done under the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman is now acquiescing in the Senate amendment, is he not?

Mr. SMITH. No; we are disagreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the purpose of the gentleman's strategy in disagreeing and not asking for a conference?

Mr. SMITH. In order to give the Senate an opportunity to reconsider and recede without a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill (H. R. 6499).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill (H. R. 7024).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE FRENCH BROAD RIVER

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5301) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, Tenn., a similar House bill, H. R. 16218, having been reported and now being on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that a similar House bill has been reported?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; a similar House bill has been reported and is now on the calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a free bridge and the approaches thereto across the French Broad River, near Bridgeport, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5377) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River, a similar House bill being on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Monongahela River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Charleroi, county of Washington, State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4560) authorizing Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between a point at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., and a point at or near Alburgh, Vt., a similar House bill being on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Elisha N. Goodsell, of Alburgh, Vt., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and he is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Lake Champlain, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., to a point at or near Alburgh, Vt., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of New York, the State of Vermont, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necesary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Departments of the States of New York and Vermont a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War, may and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable cost of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferrred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF FARMERS IN STORM AND FLOOD STRICKEN AREAS, SOUTHEASTERN UNITED STATES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I submit a privileged report on the resolution H. Res. 312 for printing in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 312

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182, for the relief of farmers in the storm and flood stricken areas of southeastern United States. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the Senate joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the Senate joint resolution, the Senate joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the Senate joint resolution for amendment, the committee shall arise and report the Senate joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the Senate joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The resolution was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 15386) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

SANCTUARIES FOR THE PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, House Resolution 307.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1271, an act to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the migratory bird refuge bill. This matter, in various forms, has been before Congress for some years. Everyone has recognized the urgent necessity of the Federal Government taking action that would protect the wild fowl of the United States, but in all the bills that have been reported heretofore there has appeared provisions that aroused so much opposition from various sources, that it has not been possible to get the enactment of an adequate law.

The bill we are about to consider has removed, I think almost entirely, the objectionable and controversial features which have appeared in bills presented heretofore.

This bill provides, first, for the creation of a commission known as the migratory bird conservation commission.

This commission is to be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is ex-officio chairman of the commission; the Secretary of the Interior; two Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate; and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. Associated with this commission in its duties will be the heads of the game department of the various States in matters relating to such States, or in States where they have no game department the governor, or some one authorized to act for him, will sit with the commission, taking part in the transactions of the commission applicable to those States.

This measure does not provide for public shooting, a feature there has been carried in former bills. It is a simon-pure migratory bird conservation measure. It carries an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. The license feature always carried in bills heretofore has been omitted.

The appropriation authorized in the bill for the first year ending June 30, 1930, is $75,000; for the next year it is $200,000; for the third year it is $600,000; and $1,000,000 thereafter for six years.

The $75,000 to be expended the first year under the plan outlined to the committee by the Department of Agriculture will be to make a survey of the United States and secure options on desirable locations for the proposed sanctuaries. There will be no acquisition of land or sites under the appropriation for the first year. It will be a general survey by the Department of Agriculture to determine where such sanctuaries can properly be located.

When the entire program contemplated in the bill is completed, we will have probably something like 125 of these refuge stations throughout the country; there will be one or more in each State of the Union. These lands will be acquired after the location has been decided upon by the commission under the terms of the bill.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARBER. Do the provisions of the bill make it compulsory to have one of these stations in each State?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Not necessarily so; I do not think that would be a wise provision. The representatives of the department said to the committee that there would be one or more in each State of the Union. Of course, they will have to be located at points where suitable locations can be secured and along the line of the travel of migratory birds.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Is it mandatory that each State shall have one of these stations?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No; as I said, however, that would be the practical result.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. It leaves it discretionary as to whether we shall have one in Georgia or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That will be left to the commission, which is composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, two Senators, and two Representatives.

Mr. ASWELL. The location of the sanctuary would depend exclusively on the action of the legislature.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes; before any sanctuary can be acquired the legislature of the State in which it is being acquired will have to give its consent in a legal way.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I notice that the House committee has stricken out the Senate bill and substituted the new bill with similar language. Can the gentleman assure me that if the bill goes to conference it will not be rewritten and be brought back with the Senate bill in it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The bill that came over from the Senate was introduced by Senator NORBECK, of South Dakota. After it had passed the Senate, certain changes seemed to be desirable, which will be explained in the course of the debate. I understand that these changes are absolutely satisfactory to the sponsors of the bill in the Senate, and was told so by Senator NORBECK. We have now substituted the Andresen bill for the Norbeck bill and are considering it as an amendment to the Senate bill, and I am assured that if the bill passes the House there will be no trouble in conference.

One of the features in this bill which appeals to me is that we are adopting a fixed and definite policy for the conservation of the wild fowl of the country. It is a long-time program. It will be 10 years, probably, before all of the sites that are necessary or desirable can be acquired, but when this is done and when these sanctuaries have been established, they are forever inviolate to the wild fowl of the country.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HALE. To what extent, if any, does it require contribution of money by the States where locations are made?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The States are not required to contribute in any way. This is a national policy, a national program for the conservation of the wild-fowl life of the United States, the necessary funds for which will come from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. In what way could an area that is already in the ownership of the United States, so that no purchase is required, be brought under the provisions of this bill? I refer to an area not in a national forest or in a water-power withdrawal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I think there is a provision here which will take care of that.

Mr. LEAVITT. I searched for that provision, and have not been able to satisfy my mind with regard to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I do not understand that the commission would have the power to arbitrarily take over a preserve now owned by the Government and convert it to one of these refuges.

Mr. LEAVITT. The particular thing I have in mind is an area in Montana which has been part of a reclamation withdrawal, but action has been taken to release it. I have asked that it be withheld without restoration to entry with the idea that its greatest use is probably for a migratory bird refuge. I want to know how under the provisions of this bill an area of that kind, which would not require purchase, and which might be agreed to by the State, could be brought within this system.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I think that could be done under the provisions of the bill. If the commission decided that it is a desirable location for one of these stations, and the Government already has title, it could be converted into a game preserve under the terms of this bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. And if there is any doubt about that, there would be no objection to an amendment to clarify it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I think not. I can not see where there would be. One of the big objections heretofore to a measure of this kind has been that they have all carried a license provision whereby anyone who desires to shoot wild fowl would be required to take out a Federal license. It was the plan to finance the whole conservation scheme by a license levied on the individual citizens of the United States.

I think everyone who has given this problem, and it is a big problem, careful consideration has reached the conclusion that this is a great national problem. Whether we be sportsmen or not, we all know the inestimable value that the wild-fowl life has to agriculture and the forest interests of the country. The Committee on Agriculture of the House has unanimously reported this bill. As I said, I think it meets every valid objection that has heretofore been urged against the enactment of the conservation legislation and merits the support of the House. I think beyond doubt it has the support of the country more generally than any measure that has been presented here during my service in Congress.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. I notice that the provisions of the bill apply to migratory birds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. The gentleman from Illinois a number of times used the term "wild game." This applies to migratory birds, and not to other game?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. It applies to migratory birds, and the fowl named in the bill are identical with those named in the treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. IRWIN. It does not apply to any other game?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No; it applies only to the wild fowl named in the treaty between the United States and Great Britain in 1916 and in the act of 1918 putting into effect the provisions of that treaty.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Does this bill define migratory birds?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes; it defines them as they are defined in the treaty between the United States and Great Britain negotiated in 1916.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman for 10 minutes with permission to yield part of that time.

Mr. Speaker, the bills relating to this subject which have been before past Congresses have always been of such a nature as to render them, it seemed to me, fundamentally objectionable, and I have always, notwithstanding my deep sympathy with the principle of wild-life conservation, found myself unable to support those measures in the past, and, as some Members probably will recall, I have not only not supported them but have opposed with all the earnestness of which I was capable their passage in the House.

The license fee, which has been contained in the measures of the past, a provision to which I was opposed, that every hunter pay a Federal license, it seemed to me presented such an encroachment on the part of the Federal Government as that it would have created an irritation on the part of citizens that would have more than destroyed all the good that might come out of the other features of the bill. Fortunately the bill that is proposed now to consider has eliminated these objections of principle that have heretofore, to my mind, been insuperable, and I am very glad on account of my deep interest in this matter of conservation that a measure has been brought before the House to which I can give my support. [Applause.]

I yield whatever time may be remaining to me to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to reach the conviction to support these bills which have had for their purpose the conservation of bird life that have come in previous Congresses, but this bill seems to have features that will preserve the wild life of America, and the objectionable features having been eliminated I feel that I can support this measure with sincerity. I was interested a few days ago in reading the account of the dedication of the sanctuary in Florida, at which the President made a dedicatory speech, not only on account of the singing tower, but the sanctuary for the preservation of bird life which surrounded it. I think it is a great lesson and that the words uttered by the President in that dedication expressed the sentiment of the people of America to preserve our wild life, because we all appreciate that many species are becoming extinct. The school children of America have long studied bird life and have been engaged in the making of bird boxes, and nearly every community has its bird club for the purpose of preserving and carrying out the very features this bill proposes to preserve with reference to wild life. Not only is there a sentiment connected with the preservation of bird life, but the study of it is recognized in the preservation of bird life. There is the destruction of insects and the preservation of crops wrapped up in this subject, and I think the Federal Government does well to take a lead in a bill that is a bill of real conservation, not a bill, as former ones have been, that will preserve the bird life in certain restricted areas and then permit people to go in there and slay and kill, which does not mean a sanctuary.

That means a place where wild life is to be destroyed. If we are going to have preservation with the idea of permanence, then it would not do for a bill like this to preserve the wild life just part of the time and permit the destruction of it at other times, and this bill will also permit the Federal Government to help keep the treaty that we have made with the Dominion of Canada.

No State by its statutes can preserve the life of migratory birds, because State lines mean nothing in such a case. It must be a national policy. This bill satisfies the requirements of a national policy, and as a real conservation bill it will make these places a real sanctuary for the bird life of America, and I am glad to support the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there are no other requests for time on the bill on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate bill. Pending that, I suggest that the debate be limited to two hours, half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1271. Pending that, the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be equally controlled by himself and the gentleman from Louisiana, each to have control of one-half of the time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1271, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1271, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the debate is confined to two hours, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL]. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to meet more effectively the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain. The Senate bill as it came to the House carried an appropriation of $1,000,000 annually for an indefinite time. The bill has been amended in accordance with suggestions made by the Department of Agriculture. As amended it carries $75,000 for the first year, $200,000 for the second year, and $600,000 for the third year, and annually $1,000,000 for seven years thereafter. It limits expenditures and maintenance of the reservation to 20 per cent of the amount appropriated for the first 10 years, and after that $200,000 a year.

As has been stated, a commission is created to be known as the migratory bird conservation commission, consisting of the Secretaries of the Departments of Agriculture, Interior, and Commerce, and two Members of the Senate, to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House, to be selected by the Speaker, to consider and pass upon any project within the meaning of the act, recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for purchase or rental, and to fix the price, and provides that no purchase or rental shall be made of any such area until it has been duly approved for purchase or rental by said commission.

By section 5 of the bill the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase or rent such areas as have been approved for purchase or rental, at the price fixed by the commission, and to acquire by gift, and so forth, of areas he shall determine to be suitable.

Particular attention has been given to the question of safeguarding the rights of the States in connection with the establishment of sanctuaries. Section 2 makes the chief game official of each State or his representative or the governor of the State having no game department or his representative, a member of the commission for the purpose of considering and voting on all questions relating to acquisition of areas under the act in his State for sanctuary purposes. Section 7 provides that no area may be acquired in a State until after the State has consented by law to such acquisition. Section 8 reserves to the State jurisdiction both civil and criminal over persons upon areas acquired by the Government. Section 9 specifies that the act is not intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States, and section 17 provides that when a State shall by suitable legislation make provision for the enforcement of the Federal law and regulation on the sanctuaries it may cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in such enforcement.

Section 2 is amended, as stated in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, by striking out the words "Postmaster General" and inserting in lieu thereof the "Secretary of the Interior." The previous bill carried the licensing feature, under the cognizance of the Postmaster General. The elimination of the license feature from the bill makes the object of the legislation foreign to the interests of the Post Office Department. The Secretary of the Interior is suggested as a member of the commission in view of his responsibilities in connection with the administration of public lands.

According to present information of the department, at least 125 sanctuares are required, one or more in each State of the Union and several in the Territory of Alaska.

Unless suitable water and marsh areas are maintained for our waterfowl for breeding and feeding grounds, these migratory birds will gradually disappear, regardless of further restrictions on hunting. Hence immediate action is vitally important.

The Secretary is not authorized to purchase or rent until it is so recommended by the commission.

Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to append a letter from the Chief of the Biological Survey, under date of January 21, 1929, setting forth its program for the establishment of the necessary sanctuaries along the migration routes:

JANUARY 21, 1929.

Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: Supplementing my remarks of this morning and at the request of your committee, I submit for its consideration the following program of expenditures under the Norbeck bill (S. 1271) to establish inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds.

As suggested in the report of this department on the measure under date of January 11, 1929, the $75,000 proposed for the first year's expenses would be used in making a comprehensive survey of the most desirable sanctuary sites throughout the United States, and in developing a clear-cut, businesslike program for the establishment of the necessary sanctuaries along the migration routes.

The biological and physical characteristics of the various sites will be studied from the standpoint of their desirability as sanctuaries and breeding, feeding, and resting places for migratory birds, and information will be gathered on which to establish the value of the areas in question as a basis for estimating their cost. This would not only include the value of the land itself but the improvements and developments necessary to establish satisfactory sanctuaries in the various localities.

Although the department has had no funds available to make thorough field examinations in order to determine just where the Federal migratory bird sanctuaries should be established, a preliminary report has been prepared by members of the Biological Survey based upon information in its files and the conclusion reached that Federal sanctuaries are needed in at least 125 concentration areas. The list includes one or more sanctuaries in each State of the Union, as shown on the attached map, and several in the Territory of Alaska. As a result of the investigations to be made during the first year, it will be determined whether these locations fit in with the program of the department for permanent sanctuaries and what additional sites should be included.

During the second year the department will proceed to secure options and acquire lands needed for the Federal sanctuaries. Practically all of the estimated amount of $200,000 will be expended in accordance with the present plans of the department on the acquisition of lands found by the investigations made during the first year to be needed for sanctuary purposes, and which have been approved for acquisition by the commission. It is not planned to expend any of this $200,000 in the administration of sanctuaries during this year.

During the third year under the $600,000 appropriation we estimate that we will use 95 per cent for the acquisition of additional lands, including the construction of necessary improvements, such as dikes, ditches, dams, etc., and approximately 5 per cent for administering the areas already acquired. Subsequently and until a sufficient number of sanctuaries have been obtained to provide for the welfare of the migratory birds, it is the present plan of the department to use each year approximately 80 to 85 per cent in acquisition and improvements and not to exceed 15 to 20 per cent for the employment of protectors to administer and patrol the sanctuaries.

Definite information is lacking as to the prices at which all the desirable lands are held. Figures have been obtained, however, with respect to a limited number of areas which would indicate that land suitable for Federal sanctuaries could in many instances be secured at an average price of not to exceed $5 per acre. The department proposes in all cases to proceed in a businesslike manner to obtain the land at the lowest possible price. In any event, no lands can be obtained under the bill except those that have been approved for purchase at prices fixed by the commission, consisting of three members of the Cabinet, two members of the House of Representatives, and two Senators.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL G. REDINGTON, Chief.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARBER. Are the representatives to be selected with regard to equal representation throughout the country?

Mr. HAUGEN. Two Members of the Senate are to be appointed by the President of the Senate and two Members of the House by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. GARBER. Does not the gentleman think that a fair representation throughout the country would be more satisfactory to the people, if some suggestion were made in the bill regarding the appointments?

Mr. HAUGEN. I assume that those making the appointments will take that into consideration.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. How are you going to distribute two Members of the House and two Members of the Senate all over the country?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no hard-and-fast rule of distribution, but I assume the suggestion that they be appointed with due regard to representation would be sufficient.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I do not see how you could get representation of all parts of the country in the appointment of two men from the House and Senate.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does this bill put any tax on the hunter?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not at all. The license feature has been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. You do not allow hunting on these sanctuaries?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not at all.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. What does it do with reference to the jurisdiction over violations? They still maintain jurisdiction over all violations of the sanctuary?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; both civil and criminal.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, during the past 25 years a great deal has been said and done regarding the conservation of our natural resources. Federal and State laws have brought about the establishment of national and State forestry park areas for the conservation of our timber supply. The educational program for tree planting, scientific utilization of timber products, and protection of forest areas, is a step in the right direction which will assure future generations of adequate timber supplies, if properly continued.

Legislation has been enacted, though wholly inadequate, for the conservation of our water power, development of inland waterways, and general protection of the Nation's untold wealth in minerals, oils, and other natural resources. This program should be extended so that our God-given natural resources may be properly used and conserved for the benefit of all the people.

Many large areas of land, sparsley timbered, particularly in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, unproductive for agricultural purposes, but abundant in beauty and wild life, rushing streams and deep, clear lakes filled with gamey fish, should be set aside as the Nation's playground. To have these areas desecrated by the ruthless advance of industry would be a travesty upon the American people. This, the "last stand" of wildernesses in the Middle West, should be left in its original wild state and consecrated as a sanctuary for the sport-loving people of this country.

Federal and State Governments are carrying out programs for the conservation and propagation of fish and other game, with varying success. During the past 10 years the supply of game fish in streams has been greatly diminished, due principally to pollution of the waters by sewage and inadequate enforcement of game laws. Unless action is promptly taken to remedy these existing evils, fishing will no longer be a sport for the rank and file but will be a pastime for those with means who are able to travel long distances into the wilderness of this country and Canada. No time should be lost in conserving the fish of the country in their natural and usual habitat.

The bill now under consideration, Senate 1271, with the companion measure, H. R. 16525, commonly known as the Norbeck-Andresen game refuge bill, deals with the conservation of migratory birds. It is a necessary measure and should be enacted into law during the present session of Congress. The act fixes a national policy for conservation of migratory birds to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory-bird treaty with Great Britain.

At the present time there are but few areas set aside as sanctuaries for migratory birds in the United States, and as a consequence during both open and closed season hundreds of thousands of birds are annually slaughtered for the lack of a safe resting and feeding haven.

The program proposed by this bill ultimately contemplates the establishment of permanent sanctuaries for migratory birds in every State in the Union and Alaska. Areas where birds may nest, feed, and rest without being molested by hunters. Inviolate sanctuaries. It has for its aim the preservation of ducks, geese, song birds, and insectivorous birds for future generations, as well as an assurance of a liberal supply of the migratory birds which may be legally taken for the hunters of to-day.

In order that the Members of the House may know as to the number of migratory birds covered by the treaty with Great Britain, I quote from Article I of the treaty, which was approved on December 8, 1916, by the representatives of the two Governments:

ARTICLE I

The high contracting powers declare that the migratory birds included in the terms of this convention shall be as follows:

1. Migratory game birds:

(a) Anatidae or waterfowl, including brant, wild ducks, geese, and swans.

(b) Gruidae or cranes, including little brown, sandhill, and whooping cranes.

(c) Rallidae or rails, including coots, gallinules, and sora and other rails.

(d) Limicolae or shorebirds, including avocets, curlew, dowitchers, godwits, knots, oyster catchers, phalaropes, plovers, sandpipers, snipe, stilts, surf birds, turnstones, willet, woodcock, and yellowlegs.

(e) Columbidae or pigeons, including doves and wild pigeons.

2. Migratory insectivorous birds: Bobolinks, catbirds, chickadees, cuckoos, flickers, flycatchers, grosbeaks, humming birds, kinglets, martins, meadowlarks, nighthawks or bull-bats, nut-hatches, orioles, robins, shrikes, swallows, swifts, tanagers, titmice, thrushes, vireos, warblers, wax-wings, whippoorwills, woodpeckers, and wrens, and all other perching birds which feed entirely or chiefly on insects.

3. Other migratory nongame birds: Auks, auklets, bitterns, fulmars, gannets, grebes, guillemots, gulls, herons, jaegers, loons, murres, petrels, puffins, shearwaters, and terns.

Such birds as the bobolinks, catbirds, humming birds, martins, meadowlarks, orioles, robins, wrens, woodpeckers, and many others are migratory birds. They live chiefly on insects and annually save the farmers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars in preventing destruction of crops by insects. The sanctuaries established under this bill will be havens for these industrious and valuable creatures. Increasing the number of insectivorous birds in America will be of enormous financial benefit to agriculture, as well as added pleasure to the American people.

One of the most detailed estimates of the extent of damage inflicted by insects in the United States is that compiled by C. L. Metcalf and presented in the fifty-fifth annual report of the Entomological Society of Ontario in 1924. At that time the aggregate damage to staple field crops, vegetable crops, fruit, greenhouse products, livestock, as well as damage and losses brought about by insect-borne diseases, was placed at $1,590,044,500.

This figure would be increased materially were it not for a number of factors that tend to reduce the numbers and control the activities of insect pests. Conspicuous among these agencies is the work done by beneficial insectivorous birds. An estimate of the value of this service has been made on the basis of a total bird population of the country. Bird enumerations have established the fact that two birds per acre is a fair estimate, at least for the eastern half of the United States. On parts of this area many more are present, making up in part at least for the admittedly smaller number of birds in some of the arid sections of the West. On this basis it is probable that there are 3,800,000,000 breeding birds in the United States. On their northward and return journeys additional migrating birds spend a portion of each year in this country. It has been estimated that this augmentation of our insect-eating birds is approximately a third of the resident population. We can assume, therefore, that there are at our service fully 4,500,000,000; the size of this feathered army is beyond real conception since each individual in it may destroy a hundred or even many hundreds of insects daily. How enormously difficult to realize is the total destruction of the insects and other animals taken up in their food! If we are to place the value of the annual services of these birds at the insignificantly low figure of 10 cents a piece, the American public would realize annually a saving of approximately $450,000,000.

This estimate, of course, is an abstract one; but many local instances have come to light where the good services of birds are glaringly apparent, and in those areas the value of these feathered aids can not be doubted. A classical instance of the beneficial work effected by birds was that performed during outbreaks of the Rocky Mountain locust in the pioneer days of Utah. To-day a monument stands in Salt Lake City in commemoration of those valued services. Even in later years the Salt Lake Valley has experienced conspicuous work of insectivorous birds. More than 45 species were known to feed on the alfalfa weevil only a comparatively short time after it was introduced. In the South 66 species were known to feed on the cotton-boll weevil, 98 prey on cutworms, 120 on leaf hoppers, and 168 on wire worms, all destructive pests of agriculture.

For the past six years or more the subject of conservation of migratory birds has been up for discussion before Congress and the conservationists of the country. In the past there has been more or less disagreement amongst the organizations as to the proper plan of conservation. I am now, however, happy to announce that all of the leading conservation organizations of the country are in thorough accord and most enthusiastically indorse and urge the passage of Senate bill 1271 as amended by the House Committee on Agriculture.

The National Committee on Wild Life Legislation, officially representing all of the leading wild-life conservation organizations in this country, has rendered a distinct service to the people of America in its unselfish effort to secure the passage of this legislation. The officers of the committee—Dr. T. Gilbert Pearson, of the National Association of Audubon Societies, as chairman; Carlos Avery, of the American Game Protective Association, as vice chairman; Seth E. Gordon, of the Izaak Walton League of America, as secretary; and the other members of the committee—deserve special mention for their untiring work in behalf of the conservation of migratory birds. These men are here to-day to witness the realization of a long-cherished dream.

The American Game Protective Association; the Izaak Walton League of America; the International Association of Game; the Western Association of Game, Fish, and Conservation Commissioners; the National Association of Audubon Societies; the American Forestry Association; the Gopher Campfire Club, of Hutchinson, Minn.; General Federation of Women's Clubs; and other organizations and individuals are now unitedly for this bill as amended, and have given most valuable aid in bringing about national interest for the conservation of migratory birds as set forth in this bill.

Senate bill 1271, as amended, has the approval of the President, the Director of the Budget, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

The bill, as amended, clearly defines and establishes a definite policy of the Government for the conservation and protection of migratory birds. Areas of land and land and water will be acquired for inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds in every State and in Alaska.

Section 2 provides for the creation of the migratory bird conservation commission, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, two Members of the Senate, appointed by the Vice President, and two Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker. The ranking officer of the State in which the refuge is located shall be a member ex officio of the commission, having the right to vote on all questions relating to the acquisition of areas in his State. The commission will have charge of selecting areas and establishing sanctuaries, and will serve without pay.

The administration of the act is placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and provides for joint cooperation with the States in the enforcement of its provisions.

The bill provides for no license fee and is financed out of the Treasury, as follows: Seventy-five thousand dollars for 1930, $200,000 for 1931, $600,000 for 1932, and $1,000,000 a year thereafter for seven years, after which time $200,000 is provided annually for the administration of the refuges.

The bill specifically provides that not more than 20 per cent of each annual authorization shall be used in the administration of the sanctuaries, leaving a balance of 80 per cent for acquisition of areas of land and land and water for inviolate sanctuaries, during the 10-year program.

To make it clear: There will be no license fee and no public shooting grounds under the provisions of the bill. The areas secured will be inviolate permanent sanctuaries for migratory birds. There will be cooperation as to enforcement and selection of sanctuaries by the State and Federal Government. Enabling legislation on the part of the State will be necessary before a sanctuary is established and acquired by the Federal Government.

The areas acquired under this act will serve a threefold purpose. First, sanctuaries for migratory birds; second, spawning and feeding grounds for fish, as well as ideal fishing grounds; and third, places for propagation of fur-bearing animals, such as beaver, mink, muskrat, and so forth.

Members of the House, this bill should receive your unanimous approval, and it is my sincere hope that it will, in its amended form, be approved by the Senate, become a law, and be recognized as the outstanding achievement for conservation of the Seventieth Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. The committee struck out everything after the enacting clause in the Senate bill. Some time ago I received a number of communications suggesting that the House pass the bill substantially as the Senate sent it over, but, as I understand, the committee has made some very substantial improvements in the bill as it came over.

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is correct.

Mr. NEWTON. And that now the very organizations which originally favored the bill as it came over are behind the bill as it has been reported to the House?

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is correct. Some of the amendments made in the bill were of minor character. The Postmaster General was designated in the Senate bill as a member of the commission originally. The idea was that the Postmaster General, through the post offices, should collect the license fee, but with the license fee eliminated from the bill we thought it better to have the Secretary of the Interior, who has control of the public lands, on the commission in preference to the Postmaster General. Another change made in the bill was as to the amount of money authorized. The Senate bill provided for an annual appropriation of $1,000,000. Upon investigation we found that during the first three years the department would be unable to spend that amount of money, so instead of providing for $1,000,000, we changed the amount to $75,000 for the first year, $200,000 the second year, and $600,000 the third year.

Mr. NEWTON. This illustrates that in the indorsement of any given proposition people would do better to indorse the general principles embodied in a bill rather than to attempt to write the detailed text of the bill.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to how large these areas will be ultimately?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Well, areas should be established all over the United States as far as the appropriations go, and that program, as I understand it, will be carried out by the Biological Survey. The Biological Survey will first make an investigation as to proper places to be designated as such areas.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. In other words, how large should an area be to serve as a game preserve?

Mr. ANDRESEN. We now have an area, known as the upper Mississippi wild-life refuge area, where the program ultimately contemplates the acquisition of 165,000 acres of land and water at a total cost of some one million and a half dollars. However, that is a large area and it will not be necessary to have as large areas as that under this bill.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. But it will be necessary to have quite large areas in order to serve these purposes?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Oh, that is true; they should be large enough so as to serve the purposes and they should also be in the line of flight, where the birds generally fly, and where there are proper feeding and nesting grounds for migratory birds. That will all be taken into consideration in connection with the investigation.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman stated that certain enabling legislation or action on the part of the States would be necessary before any sanctuaries could be established in a State. Will the gentleman briefly explain what will be necessary on the part of the respective States?

Mr. ANDRESEN. It will be necessary for the State legislatures to pass enabling legislation so that the Federal Government may take over and buy the land. The governor of a State, or the administrative officer in charge of game and fish enforcement, will sit on the commission to provide for the locations within a particular State.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. LEAVITT. I asked a previous speaker under the rule a question that I should like also to put to the author of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LEAVITT. I have not been sure in reading the bill whether it provides for a situation such as this, that there is a suitable area which belongs to the Federal Government now and which is a natural feeding ground for migratory birds. It could be made a part of this system if the Secretary of the Interior were authorized to transfer it to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of the act, but I have not been sure whether in this act there is authority that would allow the Secretary of the Interior to make such a transfer.

Mr. ANDRESEN. In answer to the gentleman I might say that at the present time there are approximately 80 different kinds of sanctuaries in the country, virtually all of which have been transferred by Executive order, and I believe that under the circumstances the gentleman mentions an Executive order could be issued.

Mr. LEAVITT. There is no question but that an Executive order could be issued, but there is a question whether the Secretary of the Interior, who is to be a member of this commission, could make such a transfer without a presidential order.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I do not believe he could.

Mr. LEAVITT. Would it not be better, since this commission is authorized to acquire other lands by purchase, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make such a transfer without the delay of an Executive order?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I do not believe so, for the reason that in some of the smaller States, where there are large national-forest areas, it might be inadvisable.

Mr. LEAVITT. Those areas, of course, are exempted under the bill. What I have in mind, to be specific, is this: Within the last few months a situation has developed in Montana with respect to an area that for many years was withdrawn as a part of a reclamation project for reservoir purposes. This area naturally would be a fine wild bird sanctuary, and the question is now up as to what is to be done with these lands. I have asked the Secretary of the Interior not to restore these lands to public entry so that they can be dissipated under the homestead law or otherwise while this matter is being worked out, and I had rather hoped that this bill would authorize the Secretary, without very much machinery, to include them in this system, if the authority created in this bill should determine that that is their wisest use. I have drawn this amendment for discussion, but I do not intend to offer it if it is not entirely satisfactory to the committee, since I desire the bill to pass speedily:

Add a new section—section 20:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture for all of the purposes of this act any areas of public land determined by the agencies herein to be suitable therefor, except such areas as are specifically exempted in this act."

This, of course, would still exempt national-forest areas or areas under water-power withdrawal except under an agreement with the States, and would not include anything except a little easier machinery for building up this system of sanctuaries by including areas that we now own and would not have to buy.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I do not believe the gentleman's amendment would do any harm, but I think as long as a commission is created to pass upon the location of the land and the designation of sanctuaries it would probably be well to leave it within their discretion as to securing an Executive order rather than to give the power to the Secretary of the Interior to transfer that land.

Mr. LEAVITT. This is simply removing one step of the difficulties.

Mr. ANDRESEN. We generally have Presidents who are in sympathy with conservation.

Mr. DENISON and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, if he will be kind enough to yield, a question about section 7. This bill, of course, is to establish a national policy and is in pursuance of a treaty with another government and proposes to establish national game refuges, and yet section 7 provides that no land shall be acquired in any State for a game refuge without the consent of the State.

If it is a matter of wise national policy to establish a game refuge why should not the Federal Government establish one in a State without the special permission of the State? What is the theory back of that provision in the bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The theory of that is that we might go into an individual county or section of a State where a great deal of the land——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Where a great deal of the land might be acquired by the Federal Government either under condemnation or by purchase which would take away from the county taxable lands and might create considerable difficulty. I know of counties in Minnesota where we would have that situation, and we feel that as long as the governor sits in as a member of the commission designating the area, that if the State is interested in conservation, we will not have any trouble about getting the areas.

Mr. DENISON. It seems to me if it is of sufficient national importance that the Federal Government should acquire land and establish game refuges and that it is of importance it should be done in a certain State, the Federal Government ought to have the right to do so, whether the State wants it done or not. I can not understand why this should be made subject to the approval of the State.

And may I ask the gentleman, while he has the floor, whether or not the States will have the right to tax this land?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; the land will be owned by the Government unless it is leased.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, section 8 of the bill gives the State civil and criminal jurisdiction over it.

Mr. ANDRESEN. If the gentleman is reading section 8 of the committee amendment——

Mr. DENISON. I am reading section 8 of the committee amendment and I did not know whether that was broad enough to include the right to tax or not.

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; it is tax-exempt property.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question. Section 9 provides—that nothing in this act is intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States.

So if we establish a game refuge in a particular State and if the laws of that State permit men to go on that land and hunt and destroy the birds, they can do it?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; they can not do that, because the State law has to comply with the Federal law and if the State law is out of line the State will have to change its law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Agriculture reports that 75 per cent of all the migratory fowl in the United States and in Canada spend their winters in the sanctuaries in the southern portion of the State of Louisiana.

This bill proposes to establish resting and feeding grounds for these migratory fowl as they fly from the north to the southern sacred sanctuaries each winter and back in the spring. All of us in that section are vitally interested in such a measure as the one proposed here.

Since the bill has been changed, the Federal license having been stricken from it and the other objectionable features removed, I have no information that there is any opposition in this Chamber to the measure. There certainly is none in the committee. There is no opposition on the floor and yet we are to discuss it for a short time.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as you know, in 1916, the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada entered into a treaty for the protection of migratory birds. Shortly thereafter Congress passed an enabling act in order to protect and uphold that treaty. That act has not been sufficient for the protection of migratory birds.

Ever since I have been a member of the Agricultural Committee there has been an effort to pass some kind of a migratory bird law that would give protection to the wild-fowl life of this country and Canada; but there has always been a division in the committee and on the floor of the House when the committee reported any bill of that character. It met with opposition, and as a result there has been no legislation.

Here is a bill reported by the committee that has met the approval of every member of that committee. I have tried to study these bills since I have been a member of the committee because I am one who is absolutely interested in the protection of the wild fowl of this country and Canada. I think this is the greatest conservation measure, without any exception, that has been presented to the Congress of the United States since I have been a member of the committee.

The two major objections to the bill heretofore reported to this House were: First, the license feature, compelling every man who hunted migratory birds to procure a Federal license from his post office, and that fund to finance the buying of preserves for these wild fowl. The second was—and this was my major objection—that it gave to the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion to open these sanctuaries at intervals and let the big hunters of the country come in and have a good time, when the poor fellow at home paid a dollar for his license and did not have time nor money to go into the preserve.

Now, these two features have been eliminated by this bill. This is a representative bill; it is a democratic bill; it coordinates with State authority in the enforcement of it. First and foremost, it creates a commission composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, and two Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker, two Members of the Senate, appointed by the Vice President, and one representative, either at the head of a game department of the State, if the State has one, and, if not, the governor of the State, who shall be a member of this commission, with as much power as any other member of the commission on the question of buying preserves within their respective States.

It also provides that the States shall have the right to enforce any game laws so long as they do not conflict with the Federal game laws in the preserves or sanctuaries.

The biological survey of the Department of Agriculture has already given years of study to this proposition, looking to the day when Congress might pass a bill for real conservation of wild fowl life in this country and Canada. In their letter they say that they have all agreed that there are as many as 125 game preserves, and that they are so distributed that at least every State in the Union will have one. Therefore, if this bill is passed there will be 125 of these preserves.

Mr. ALMON. And each State will have at least one?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Each State will have at least one, but I do not care about that feature, because you have got to have land of a certain topographical nature in order to have the propagation of the game.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. A State would not want a preserve if they had no use for one. In other words, no State would request one if they had no use for it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely; and that is the reason for putting in that provision in order to establish a preserve the State has to agree to it. If they did not want it they need not have it.

If they do want it, we want them to come in wholeheartedly, and with all of their local forces, game wardens, and others, helping to preserve the wild fowl of America. When you have as many as 125 game preserves throughout this country made inviolate sanctuaries, so that a gun is never fired in them for any purpose, you are going to preserve the wild fowl life of this country and Canada. It does not make any difference how many million ducks, or geese, or other migratory birds go from the North to the South in the wintertime and back again later on, unless you have some place in transit for those birds to rest and feed and nest it will not be very far in the future when you will have no wild fowl life either in this country or in the Dominion of Canada.

To me the passage of a bill like this is not only a benefit to the wild-fowl life of the country, but it is for the common weal, it is of good to everyone. The marshlands in the United States are being very rapidly, and I think distressingly so, cleared up for agricultural purposes, when there are millions of acres of agricultural lands in the country not now under cultivation. Why should not those marshlands be preserved? Why is there not conservation policy in that? If we establish these sanctuaries inviolate there will not be any trouble about the propagation of game. The wild ducks and the wild geese and the other migratory birds that make the round trip each way will find more quickly than anything else where there is a gun fired. There will be no trouble if these preserves are established under this bill, because these birds will know in a very little while where to go where no gun is ever fired. I do not know whether any of you other gentlemen have had the experience or not, but I have driven around the Speedway here in duck season and I have seen from two to five hundred wild ducks right out here in the river.

Mr. FENN. And they are there to-day.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; they are there to-day; and they are there because they know if they go a little farther down the river a gun will be fired at them.

Then the bill provides for cooperation in the enforcement of the law by the various States. That I think is absolutely necessary. You can not enforce any law without the support of the local government and the sentiment of that government in favor of enforcement. If these sanctuaries are established, we say that the State must take affirmative action and say that it will cooperate, and will pass an enabling act so that we can take the territory, and we will not take any territory in any State in the Union unless that State consents to it. It is a cooperative measure not only in the acquisition of these preserves, but in the enforcement of the State laws.

In the original bill we provided for an appropriation of a million dollars a year. In this bill we start with $75,000 for the first year for the purpose of making these surveys, and then the sum increases each year up to a million dollars in 1933, and remains at a million dollars a year until 1939, it being the opinion, of course, that in that time they will have been able to purchase all of the preserves that are necessary. After the preserves are obtained, it is the opinion of the Agricultural Department that it will take only a sum of $200,000 a year as operating expenses in order to enforce the law in every game preserve in the United States.

If we pass the bill to-day and it goes to the Senate, we have the assurance that it will enact the bill as it is. If we pass this bill to-day, I believe that posterity will rise and call us more blessed for this vote than for any vote that has been cast here in years. [Applause.]

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to observe the transformation in the sentiment of the game associations of America with respect to this legislation as we read of their approvals of this bill. The record will show that I have been opposed to legislation on this subject as embraced in former bills. I have never opposed legislation for the preservation of game. I yield to no Member of the House in my sincerity and ardor for the preservation of game. I heretofore opposed the bills because they were not for the preservation of game, but for the establishment of public hunting grounds, public shooting grounds, thereby inexorably establishing reservations for the destruction of game and not for the preservation of game. Moreover, I did not think Congress had authority to enact such legislation, unless we did it in pursuance of our treaty with Canada, and that treaty does not provide for or contemplate public hunting grounds.

That treaty affords no basis for the passage of any measure for the destruction of game, but is a basis only for the preservation of game. I have been in receipt of some very caustic letters by reason of my attitude on these bills. I am happy to say that the authors of some of these letters and criticisms are to-day supporting this bill, based upon the identical ground which I have always heretofore taken—that the Congress has a right to legislate for the preservation of game and not for the destruction of game, no matter how the language may have been camouflaged.

I have pleasure in supporting this particular bill. It meets my views and convictions. I have on former occasions stated on this floor that I would support any reasonable bill for preservation of game, for sanctuaries for birds if the provisions for the establishment of public hunting or shooting reservations and Federal licenses were eliminated. I congratulate the committee that this elimination has been made in the pending bill, and that I am now enabled to vote my approval of a game-preservation measure.

I think we are now free of the vice which has impaired if not destroyed the merits of all former bills upon this subject, and that we have now open to us a clear way for the preservation of the migratory birds of America.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the House. In 1916 the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland entered into a treaty (treaty series No. 628), as shown in Senate Document 348. That treaty was to last for a period of 15 years. The names of more than 70 kinds of wild life are listed in this treaty. Twenty-nine different varieties of those birds are birds that eat insects and therefore are valuable both to production and to life. This treaty was signed by both countries and became effective on December 8, 1916.

Its terms provide for an operative period of 15 years. At the end of those 15 years, which will be 1931, if neither of the countries give 12 months' notice of their desire to be relieved of the provisions of the treaty it would be automatically extended for a period of 1 year, and thereafter from year to year until such notice may be given. Thus, so long as the two countries are satisfied with the provisions of the treaty it will automatically remain effective. If anyone desires to read or look up the names of the birds referred to here he will find it on page 2646——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman put those in his speech?

Mr. JONES. I will put the reference in the speech, and any gentleman desiring to do so can get Senate Document 628, which contains the full text of the treaty. I want to emphasize the point made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]. The provisions of that treaty state that its purpose is for the preservation of these useful birds, and to prevent their indiscriminate slaughter. The first bill, over which we had such a fight in the House and which had both the licensing fee and the provision for public shooting grounds, purported to be a measure for the carrying out of this treaty, and yet even the most casual reading of that bill disclosed the fact that it was not essentially for the preservation of the birds, but its primary purpose was to furnish a slaughtering ground for professional huntsmen of the country, who, under its terms, could follow the birds from place to place until in their helplessness they would be driven frantic with fear and, of course, ultimately destroyed. But this bill in accordance with the terms of the treaty is a pure sanctuary bill. It will not in any way interfere with legitimate hunting. It is in the interest of the true sportsman, for it furnishes a haven of refuge for the wild life of the country, without in any way interfering with such shooting as the treaty permits outside the limits of the sanctuaries.

The purpose of the treaty is stated in terms as follows:

> Being desirous of saving from indiscriminate slaughter and of insuring the preservation of such migratory birds as are either useful to man or harmless, the contracting parties have resolved to adopt some uniform system of protection which shall effectively accomplish such object, and to the end of concluding a convention for this purpose have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries—

And so forth.

That states the purpose of the treaty, which treaty is signed by the two contracting governments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Under this bill hunting will not be permitted on the game reserve.

Mr. JONES. No; hunting on the game preserves under no circumstances will be allowed under the terms of this bill. The first bill provided not only for public shooting grounds but also gave the privilege, at certain periods of the year, of entering the sanctuary itself for purposes of shooting. But in this bill those features have been eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. JONES. It also forbade any man hunting on his own premises if he did not have the dollar license, which he would have to go to the post office and get, even if he shot only one time in the year.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand the gentleman makes the point that the measure we had here before was not really in line with the purposes of the treaty?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. One more question: Has the gentleman any information to show the results as to the multiplying of these birds under legislation heretofore enacted under the treaty?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will secure the hearings that were had a year ago, he will find that they set out the full information gained by the Department of Agriculture on that point.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is contained in the report?

Mr. JONES. Yes; in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture.

This bill eliminates the license feature and the shooting-ground feature. There will be places in the future, if this measure passes, where birds going south will enter these sanctuaries and will be there protected against all character of hunting. It will be impossible then to destroy the wild life of this country. As a matter of fact, the number and value of the wild life of this country are inconceivable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. ASWELL. I yield to the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I want to ask a question. Of course, I favor this bill. The gentleman from Texas made a remark a little while ago that a man could not hunt on his own premises.

Mr. JONES. That was under the original bill. That is, he could not hunt on the premises unless he actually lived on the specific ground and had less than 160 acres. If he had a tract across the road he could not hunt on it. But this measure corrects that.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. During the shooting season this will not interfere with a man hunting on his own preserves?

Mr. JONES. No. I was speaking of the original bill. This bill before us now carries out the original treaty, both in letter and spirit, between this country and Great Britain as negotiated in 1916; and I believe that with the provisions of this bill properly carried out, that treaty will continue to be a friendly treaty relationship between our country and the British Empire, and especially the Dominion of Canada, probably for an indefinite period.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. Is there anything in this bill that will prevent a private gun club from shooting on its own grounds?

Mr. JONES. There is nothing in the bill covering that. Of course, such shooting would be limited by the treaty. Shooting would only be allowed in season.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Ought there not to be a proviso in the bill to the effect that no reservation shall be located within a State that does not provide for that?

Mr. JONES. I think that would be a wise provision. I think, however, that probably will be taken care of in the regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, no further time is requested on this side.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I recognize, of course, that there is no concerted opposition to this bill, and therefore I do not purpose to take the time of the committee for any extended observations. But I thought that just a word or two by way of recollection of the debate heretofore might be of interest.

By a peculiar coincidence this measure has been before the House three different times in the month of February. The first time it was reported in the House was in February, 1923. I think you will recall the interest that was shown in that debate. The three principal features to which the fire was directed in the bill, as has already been indicated, were the licensing feature, the public shooting grounds, and the unusual control by the Federal Government. I want to set out just in a sentence or two, to indicate the trend of the debate, the remarks made by a few Members of the House at that time.

These will only be selected sentences. In the first place, may I quote one sentence in the argument made in opposition to the 1923 form of the bill by the minority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who favors the present bill? Said he, speaking of the friends of the bill:

> They fail to appreciate the fact that this is but enhancing Federal power, taking another step toward adding to the restlessness and discontent of the average citizen with the Federal Government.

I think that fairly well indicates the attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee and many of those who voted against the bill at that time.

Mr. Mondell, the majority floor leader at that time, was also opposed to the bill, and I think you will be interested in one sentence from his remarks. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, I have tried to make it plain that my opposition to this legislation is because it is an extraordinary extension of Federal police power without any sound reason or excuse for such extension.

I want to refer just a moment to an expression from conservative New England. Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, said:

> I think it is a very poor bill, and I wish my colleagues on the Republican side were as cordial in their indorsement of that statement as my Democratic friends are; but this is not a political matter, gentlemen. It is purely a question whether or not we are going to get down to brass tacks on the question of controlling everything in sight from a Federal Government center. I am opposed to that principle.

Governor MONTAGUE, of Virginia, has already set out his own views on the present bill, but I think as a matter of history it might be well to read one sentence from his remarks on that first bill. Said Governor MONTAGUE:

> Mr. Chairman, if this were a bill for the protection of game I would vote for it cheerfully. If it were to set aside a sanctuary or refuge for these birds I would vote for it. But these are mere incidents in the bill.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman means to refer to the remarks on the former bill and not this bill?

Mr. KETCHAM. I thought that was clear.

Mr. ASWELL. I wanted that made clear.

Mr. KETCHAM. These, of course, are remarks made in connection with the debate on the first bill that was presented. It may interest the committee to know something about the details of the vote taken on these other occasions. On the first form of the bill as presented to the House the test vote was upon a motion to strike out the enacting clause. That prevailed by a vote of 154 to 135. Subsequently the matter was brought to the attention of the House a second time under a special rule, in February, 1925, and in the form of the bill then reported a very sincere effort was made to correct many of the things complained of in the first form. So successful was the Committee on Agriculture in this effort that the bill passed the House at that time by a vote of 212 to 113.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I have found by checking the RECORD that 29 different gentlemen of the House who cast their votes in opposition to the first form of the bill voted for it upon its second presentation to the House.

Now, in the present form of the bill I think everything that has been complained of by the opponents of the bill has been met, and so far as I am aware and so far as the hearings before the committee indicate there is no opposition offered to it, and I sincerely trust that this perfected form of the bill will meet with the overwhelming approval of the House, with the understanding that if it goes to the Senate there will be a general agreement in conference and the bill in the form as we now present it, which I believe by far is the best form, will finally be enacted into law and a great forward step taken in this tremendous problem of conservation. It certainly is a pleasure to note that the present bill meets the hearty approval of the three gentlemen mentioned now in the House who so strongly opposed it in 1921.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. As I understand, the bill does not carry a license fee?

Mr. KETCHAM. It does not carry a license fee. The bill also eliminates the other very objectionable shooting-grounds provision to which attention was called. It goes further, and, I think, works out as satisfactorily as it can be worked out this vexing question of Federal and State authority with reference to control.

Mr. GREEN. I may say to the gentleman that I have received a large number of telegrams and even more letters in support of the bill and none opposing it. Therefore I am supporting the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, while, as has been indicated, when this bill was before the House on previous occasions there was a great deal of opposition to it, that opposition, I think, was always to the form of the bill and not to its purpose. It has been stated that by the provisions of this bill the Government embarks upon a new policy. It does not, however, do that in a broad sense. This Government has recognized for many years its obligation to conserve our wild life and to maintain refuges for our migratory birds. However, until the present time there has been no definite constructive policy in this regard. We have, I think, at the present time, some 65 or 70 bird refuges, but all of those have been acquired piecemeal and not as a result of any definite plan.

The result has been that they are not, perhaps, as useful or well located as they might otherwise be. Under this plan the Secretary of Agriculture and other members of the board will have an opportunity to make a survey of the entire country and determine the proper locations of these refuges. There are a good many things to be taken into consideration in determining these locations. Migratory birds, as you all know, have certain well-defined routes of flight and these refuges will have to be located on those routes. They will also have to be located with reference to the habits of the birds and the availability of food supplies. Their location must also be determined with reference to whether they are going to be used as feeding grounds, as nesting grounds, or resting grounds, in the course of a flight.

The Biological Survey, I am informed, has already made quite an extensive survey of the country for this purpose and they say that at the present time they have in mind at least 125 sites which it would be possible to use as migratory-bird refuges. Heretofore they have never had an appropriation which was sufficient to allow them to make a proper and thorough investigation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I will.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This act, as I read it, is intended to supplant the former migratory bird act?

Mr. HOPE. It is.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have not seen anything in the act which repeals that law or any part of the law that is in conflict with this act.

Mr. HOPE. In reply to that, I will say that perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman when I said it was expected to supplant any former act. It is not expected to take the place of any former act, but it does supplant former bills which have been before this Congress but which have never been enacted into law.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The former migratory bird bill passed by the House was not enacted by the Senate. Is that the situation? I understand we passed it in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes; in 1918 we passed the migratory bird act, but this in no way repeals that act but deals with the whole subject in a practical manner. All this bill does is to provide sanctuary for these birds.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This is just to dovetail into the other act. The other act provides for a licensing fee, as I understand.

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; I will say to the gentleman there is no license fee now charged by the Federal Government for the shooting of migratory birds and there is no law on that subject. As the gentleman stated, the purpose of this bill is to dovetail into the other act and make it a part of the general scheme of protection of migratory birds.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I do not want to further take the time of the gentleman from Kansas. His explanation makes entirely clear to me the purpose and scope of the pending bill.

Mr. HOPE. This measure, I may say, is purely supplemental to all of our previous laws either creating game refuges or for the protection of migratory birds generally. It does not attempt to repeal or modify any of our present laws on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. I was telling of some of the work that the Biological Survey has already done in connection with establishing these refuges. It has not only made a survey for the purpose of determining where these refuges should be located, but there have been, as Members of Congress know, a number of refuges established within recent years and since the migratory bird treaty was consummated in 1916. One of these is the Upper Mississippi Refuge, another is the Bear River Marsh Refuge out in Utah; but never until the proposal of this measure have we had a definite, comprehensive program for the establishment of these sanctuaries.

Canada has far outstripped us in establishing bird sanctuaries. At the present time Canada has some 1,700 square miles which is either inviolate sanctuaries or a combination of sanctuaries and public shooting grounds. One thousand square miles of the total areas comprises inviolate sanctuaries and the remaining 700 square miles of course is a sanctuary during most of the year, although shooting is permitted during certain seasons.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did I undestand the gentleman to say that Canada has reservations that are in part sanctuaries and in part public shooting grounds?

Mr. HOPE. My understanding is they have a total of 1,700 square miles of bird refuges and about 1,000 square miles of the area is a year-round sanctuary, but shooting is permitted on about 700 square miles of this area of refuges; that is, there are 40 of these sanctuaries which are inviolate the year round and there are 51 upon which shooting is permitted during certain seasons of the year.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. Is it the intention of those who have originated this legislation to make these sanctuaries inviolate or to permit shooting on them?

Mr. HOPE. It is the intention of this bill, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, to make these sanctuaries inviolate.

Mr. DENISON. But the bill does not do that.

Mr. HOPE. Yes; the bill does do that.

Mr. DENISON. The bill provides that the game laws of the States shall apply, and under the laws of the States they can go in there and hunt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two more minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Section 9 of the bill reads as follows:

> That nothing in this act is intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States applying to migratory game birds in so far as they do not permit what is forbidden by Federal law.

There is no Federal law preventing or prohibiting such shooting.

Mr. HOPE. This bill provides in other sections that the sanctuaries shall be inviolate.

Mr. DENISON. Then, what does the section mean that says the State game laws shall apply? What State game laws will apply?

Mr. HOPE. I take it that simply means this proposed act does not apply to State game laws as far as they affect the States outside of these sanctuaries.

Mr. DENISON. It does not say that.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that before the sanctuaries may be established in any State it will be necessary to have enabling legislation within that State, and that enabling legislation will provide that these areas shall be inviolate sanctuaries.

Mr. DENISON. How do we know that others will not be established?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any doubt that under the provisions of the bill, taken as a whole, there can be established nothing but inviolate sanctuaries. If that is not clear in the bill it ought to be, but I am satisfied, so far as I am concerned, that that is included in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. That may be true, but I can not understand the necessity for section 9, which provides that nothing in the act shall interfere with the State game laws. I wish some Member of the House who is familiar with the terms of the bill will explain that to the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL].

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the migratory bird act protects migratory game birds from the dangers threatened by drainage, and other causes, by acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for adequate protection of such birds.

This act, in my judgment, is one that will perpetuate the hunting for future generations more than any bill that could be passed in Congress.

Civilization and cultivation of lands and drainage of lands have taken away from large areas in the United States the sport and hunting that has existed for many years and has eliminated the opportunity of those who enjoy outdoor life, and especially hunting, to such an extent that it makes it necessary now for those that may desire to hunt to either build or cooperate with those who do build hunting preserves, thus eliminating at least 95 per cent of the population who might have opportunities if this bill is voted through the Congress of the United States and becomes a law.

I favor it for many reasons. The young boy, either from the city or the country, should have opportunities of knowing what wild life is in this country. The opportunities that were given to the earlier generations have passed and there is no way that hunting can be preserved better than by passing a migratory bird act which will establish reservations for their protection and game laws which will protect the migratory bird from destruction during the period of hatching and raising of the young birds.

I am well acquainted with a section of the country known as the Illinois-Mississippi Valley which is probably the best hunting section for migratory birds of any part of the country. Unless provisions are made for the protection and conservation of the North American birds, it will only be a few years until they will be extinct.

I favor this bill as a whole and I hope every Member of Congress will vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, as confirming what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL], I want to read a telegram from a man who resides in my district and who has, I think, done as much by his personal effort in the interest of wild life in Canada and this country as any other citizen of the United States. He is Dr. William T. Hornaday, for many years the head of the Zoological Park in New York. He has traveled extensively in this and other countries and has an international reputation as an expert and writer on wild life. Both by his writings and his influence he has greatly aided legislation such as this bill contains. The telegram is as follows:

STAMFORD, CONN., February 8, 1929.

Hon. SCHUYLER MERRITT,

House of Representatives:

On behalf of progressive conservation, I beg you to oppose all amendments that may be offered to the Andresen-Norbeck bill as unnecessary and dangerous. As it stands, the bill is perfect, and with both the birds and the sanctuaries it is a case of now or never.

WILLIAM T. HORNADAY.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no other requests for time.

Mr. AYRES. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is exhausted, and the Clerk will read the bill. Without objection, the Clerk will read the committee amendment in lieu of the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises and reports the bill to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that, pursuant to the rule, the committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1271) for the protection of migratory game birds, and reported the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AYRES) there were 219 ayes and 0 noes.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON THE BILL

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SANCTUARIES FOR THE PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted Members of Congress to extend their remarks in the RECORD I desire to avail myself of that opportunity and to express my thought upon the bill establishing a sanctuary to protect migratory birds. The measure as amended and passed by the House provides a real refuge for the protection and conservation of bird life.

Bird life has been ruthlessly slaughtered by both wanton selfishness and careless attention to this species of fowl which means so much to the food life of man. The bird not only means a food supply but the habits of the bird provide destruction of enemies to crop and vegetable life.

Nature intended that in the orderly carrying out of its laws in a systematic manner all animal life should exist; some for food of other animals; some to destroy insects and other species of life which menace plant, vegetable, and timber life; all being important elements in the food growth for the success and life of the people.

Under the provisions of the bill, land and water can be acquired over a period of 10 years; sanctuaries are created in all of the States desiring to come within the provisions of the act, such States cooperating with the Federal Government in the enforcement of the law.

In my opinion, such cooperation between States and Federal Government is most important, because to make a law fully effective its provisions should be fully appreciated in each State and such provisions should be strictly observed in conformity with the act.

The bill offers hope to the sportsman who believes in protecting wild life not only for the pleasure and recreation he will procure in the hunt during the proper hunting season, but also because the measure means the curtailing of destructive waste.

Actual protection is offered bird life in its necessary flight from one locality to another; a resting and nesting home where the bird is at least temporarily safe is provided.

The bill as passed provides $75,000 the first year, $200,000 the second year, $600,000 the third year, and $1,000,000 annually for each year thereafter for a period of seven years. This expenditure, if handled properly and systematically, can increase the species of wild-bird life enormously, and the provisions are extended to all the States upon a successful cooperative plan.

Under the provisions of the measure, the Secretary of the Interior is made a member of the Migratory Bird Conservatory Commission. This is a very proper feature because remaining public land, Indian reservations, national parks, national monuments, and other Government reservations of land and water are under the supervision of this Government department. The Secretary of Agriculture should also be added to the commission; his department having under control the national forests of our country. The forests should be the home of much of our bird life; there the birds can rest and raise their young; in a broader sense of the word "sanctuary," the forests should be closed completely to the hunter. Only hunting for the destruction of predatory animals should be allowed in the forests.

Other principal features of the bill are explained in an article which appeared in the Sunday Star, February 10, 1929, and which is entitled "House Passes Bill Protecting Birds," and from which I quote:

OTHER FACTORS INVOLVED

Secretary Jardine of the Department of Agriculture emphasizes that the acquisition of areas suitable for refuges, although primarily intended to increase the numbers of wild fowl, really involve a number of other important factors of definite advantage to the public. It is a serious mistake, he said, to believe that all drainage of water or marsh areas is a public benefit, because actual experience has shown in numerous instances that drainage has resulted in the destruction of water areas which have very profitable uses, and have left instead land of little or no agricultural value.

Under proper conditions, Secretary Jardine points out, many lakes, ponds, swamps, and marsh areas will yield distinctly larger returns financially and otherwise than would the same areas drained for agricultural purposes. The development and utilization of all available products of such areas is termed "water farming."

In addition to the returns that water and swamp areas may yield in wild fowl, many other benefits may result along the following lines:

First. A valuable supply of food and game fish.

Second. Their annual return in furs from such animals as beavers, muskrats, skunks, and raccoons, which frequent them.

Third. Their production in certain areas of grasses, valuable for forage, or for the manufacture of grass rugs and other commodities, which have developed a profitable industry; also in suitable areas, the production of willow suitable for basketry, wicker furniture, and other purposes.

Fourth. A natural ice supply.

Fifth. Definite help they afford in maintaining the underground water level, which is essential for the production of forests and other vegetation, and for subirrigation of hay and other agricultural lands.

Sixth. Their invaluable function in holding back the run-off of flood waters, and in assisting to prevent excessive erosion and other flood damages. The systematic drainage of shallow lakes and swamp areas along drainage ways will greatly increase the danger of floods and the destruction of life and property. The effect of too extensive drainage deserves careful attention in view of its direct relation to the public welfare.

Seven. Many of the more attractive of such water areas lend themselves admirably to educational uses and assist in interesting the people in outdoor recreation and in the natural resources of plant and animal life, which are so important in supplying commodities, such areas in effect constituting outdoor laboratories for important and varied scientific investigations.

The quotation, in my opinion, is worthy of publicity in showing the greater benefits to be derived from the enactment of the legislation. In the main this class of legislation is wholesome, constructive, and in the interest of all the people. It shows no personal interest in the protection and propagation of game for the few; rather, a very broad view is taken to protect a form of life which adds much to man's food supply and also much in the protection and healthy growth of vegetable and timber life.

The State which I have the honor to represent, New Mexico, has a great variety of bird life, and a real effort is being made to protect this form of life by sanctuaries as proposed by the legislation in question.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANT

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Joint Resolution 398, to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 398) to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes

Resolved, etc., That the first section of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1924, as amended by joint resolutions approved March 3, 1927, and May 28, 1928, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1929" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1930."

SEC. 2. The present members of the joint committee created by section 3 of such joint resolution approved June 5, 1924, as amended, if reelected to the Seventy-first Congress, shall continue to serve, notwithstanding the expiration of the Seventieth Congress, until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, at which time such joint committee shall cease to exist. In case a vacancy occurs in such joint committee by reason of the retirement from Congress on March 4, 1929, of any Member of the House of Representatives, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, before the expiration of the Seventieth Congress, appoint a Member of the House to fill such vacancy.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution states its purpose. It was introduced by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON], chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands. If there are any questions about the resolution, I should be glad to yield to the gentleman to explain. If not, and there is no desire for debate, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CELEBRATION OF CANALIZING THE OHIO RIVER

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Rules I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 51, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House Concurrent Resolution 51, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 51

Whereas the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., represents an achievement of great importance in the development of the inland waterways of the United States; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has by legislation contributed to the realization of this project; and

Whereas a celebration commemorating the accomplishment of the great improvement is to be held October 15 to 20, 1929, at which officials of the United States and of the States adjoining the Ohio River will attend; and

Whereas it is fitting that the Congress of the United States be represented at such celebration: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee consisting of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., to be held October 15 to 20, 1929. The members of such committee shall be paid their actual expenses, one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the report of the Committee on Rules states that this is a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have it considered. Of course, it is not a privileged report. If it were privileged, unanimous consent would not be necessary to get it considered. I am wondering whether the gentleman from Indiana concedes that it is not.

Mr. SNELL. He does, or he would not have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, evidently it was so regarded, otherwise I would not have submitted a request for unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. MAPES. The committee evidently did not so regard it when it made the report, because it stated in its report that it was a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I am the one who is in error in that respect. We did understand that this is not a privileged report, but I had consulted with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, and this was such a small matter that we thought we would put it all through in one resolution and that there would be no objection to it at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I particularly request the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. I rise to say a word or two concerning the matter that has just been discussed in the colloquy between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL]. It is true that there is a precedent holding that a concurrent resolution very similar to the one presented by the gentleman from Indiana is not privileged. That is a decision made by Mr. Speaker Clark, though I do not now remember the date of it. I have had occasion recently to examine it. It is my opinion that upon a more complete examination than was then given to that question, upon a fuller reasoning, some occupant of the chair in the future will probably feel constrained to overrule that precedent.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can see no real distinction, so far as reasoning is concerned, between the privilege of a concurrent resolution creating a joint committee, and a simple House resolution creating a House committee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this resolution is not privileged for two reasons. One is based upon the precedent of Mr. Speaker Clark that it does not relate to matters pertaining to the rules, joint rules, or order of business; and, further, it makes an appropriation out of the contingent fund of the House, over which the Committee on Accounts has exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no question about that latter part destroying the privileged character of the resolution, but——

Mr. MAPES. For the two reasons that resolution is not privileged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. I did not have that latter part in mind. Of course, that precedent is well fixed and grounded in reason, but what I had in mind was holding it nonprivileged simply because it is to create or initiate a joint committee, which may eventually prove more important.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, that point is not being argued now, and the gentleman is merely stating his own opinion about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course that is so.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WAINWRIGHT, for Monday, February 11, on account of urgent business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 11, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Monday, February 11, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Heavenly Father, whose life is within and whose love is about us, make us glad of heart as without haste or confusion we enter upon our appointed tasks, conscious of our ability to meet every rightful demand because of Thine indwelling. Give us a robust spirit that shall choose its way with self-possession, with the discerning eye of interest and the quick pulse of power—a spirit that shall enable us to know our fellow men and plead their righteous cause. May ours be the helping hand to the weak, may we be a comfort to those in sorrow and affliction, even as we have been comforted of Thee, that with heart and hand we may give ourselves to do the work of Him who hath called us to follow His most holy life, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

S. 4560. An act authorizing Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between a point at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., and a point at or near Alburgh, Vt.;

S. 5301. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, Tenn.; and

S. 5377. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 16878. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had adopted a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 51) to appoint a committee from the Senate and House to represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., October 15 to 20, 1929, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance, and improvement, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act shall be known by the short title of "Migratory bird conservation act."

SEC. 2. That a commission to be known as the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, as chairman, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, and two Members of the Senate, to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to consider and pass upon any area of land, water, or land and water that may be recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for purchase or rental under this act, and to fix the price or prices at which such area may be purchased or rented; and no purchase or rental shall be made of any such area until it has been duly approved for purchase or rental by said commission. Any Member of the House of Representatives who is a member of the commission, if reelected to the succeeding Congress, may serve on the commission notwithstanding the expiration of a Congress. Any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The ranking officer of the branch or department of a State to which is committed the administration of its game laws, or his authorized representative, and in a State having no such branch or department, the governor thereof, or his authorized representative, shall be a member ex officio of said commission for the purpose of considering and voting on all questions relating to the acquisition, under this act, of areas in his State.

SEC. 3. That the commission hereby created shall, through its chairman, annually report in detail to Congress, not later than the first Monday in December, the operations of the commission during the preceding fiscal year.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall recommend no area for purchase or rental under the terms of this act except such as he shall determine is necessary for the conservation of migratory game birds.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase or rent such areas as have been approved for purchase or rental by the commission, at the price or prices fixed by said commission, and to acquire by gift or devise, for use as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds, areas which he shall determine to be suitable for such purposes, and to pay the purchase or rental price and expenses incident to the location, examination, and survey of such areas and the acquisition of title thereto, including options when deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, from moneys to be appropriated hereunder by Congress from time to time: Provided, That no lands acquired, held, or used by the United States for military purposes shall be subject to any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things and make all expenditures necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the areas which may be acquired under this act, but no payment shall be made for any such areas until the title thereto shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General, but the acquisition of such areas by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of rights of way, easements, and reservations which from their nature will in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture in no manner interfere with the use of the areas so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights of way, easements, and reservations retained by the grantor or lessor, from whom the United States receives title, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such areas as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds; and it shall be expressed in the deed or lease that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights of way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations.

SEC. 7. That no deed or instrument of conveyance shall be accepted by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act unless the State in which the area lies shall have consented by law to the acquisition by the United States of lands in that State.

SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction of the State, both civil and criminal, over persons upon areas acquired under this act shall not be affected or changed by reason of their acquisition and administration by the United States as migratory bird reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States is concerned.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act is intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States applying to migratory game birds in so far as they do not permit what is forbidden by Federal law.

SEC. 10. That no person shall knowingly disturb, injure, or destroy any notice, signboard, fence, building, ditch, dam, dike, embankment, flume, spillway, or other improvement or property of the United States on any area acquired under this act, or cut, burn, or destroy any timber, grass, or other natural growth, on said area or on any area of the United States which heretofore has been or which hereafter may be set apart or reserved for the use of the Department of Agriculture as a game refuge or as a preserve or reservation and breeding ground for native birds, under any law, proclamation, or Executive order, or occupy or use any part thereof, or enter thereon for any purpose, except in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; nor shall any person take any bird, or nest or egg thereof on any area acquired under this act, except for scientific or propagating purposes under permit of the Secretary of Agriculture; but nothing in this act or in any regulation thereunder shall be construed to prevent a person from entering upon any area acquired under this act for the purpose of fishing in accordance with the law of the State in which such area is located: Provided, That such person complies with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture covering such area.

SEC. 11. That for the purposes of this act, migratory birds are those defined as such by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded August 16, 1916.

SEC. 12. For the acquisition, including the location, examination, and survey, of suitable areas of land, water, or land and water, for use as migratory bird reservations, and necessary expenses incident thereto, and for the administration, maintenance, and development of such areas and other preserves, reservations, or breeding grounds frequented by migratory game birds and under the administration of the Secretary of Agriculture, including the construction of dams, dikes, ditches, flumes, spillways, buildings, and other necessary improvements, and for the elimination of the loss of migratory birds from alkali poisoning, oil pollution of waters, or other causes, for cooperation with local authorities in wild life conservation, for investigations and publications relating to North American birds, for personal services, printing, engraving, and issuance of circulars, posters, and other necessary matter and for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, there are authorized to be appropriated, in addition to all other amounts authorized by law to be appropriated, the following amounts for the fiscal years specified—

Seventy-five thousand dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930;

Two hundred thousand dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931;

Six hundred thousand dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932;

One million dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933;

One million dollars for each fiscal year thereafter for a period of six years; and

Two hundred thousand dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for each fiscal year thereafter. Not more than 20 per cent of the amounts appropriated pursuant to this authorization for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1930, and for each fiscal year to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, shall be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere incident to the administration and maintenance of acquired areas, printing, engraving, and issuance of circulars and posters. No part of any appropriation authorized by this section shall be used for payment of the salary, compensation, or expenses of any United States game protector, except reservation protectors for the administration, maintenance, and protection of such reservations and the birds thereon: Provided, That reservation protectors appointed under the provisions of this act shall be selected, when practicable, from qualified citizens of the State in which they are to be employed. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to make such expenditures and to employ such means, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing objects.

SEC. 13. That for the efficient execution of this act, the judges of the several courts established under the laws of the United States, United States commissioners, and persons appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce this act, shall have, with respect thereto, like powers and duties as are conferred by section 5 of the migratory bird treaty act (title 16, sec. 706, U. S. C.) upon said judges, commissioners, and employees of the Department of Agriculture appointed to enforce the act last aforesaid. Any bird, or part, nest or egg thereof, taken or possessed contrary to this act, when seized shall be disposed of as provided by section 5 of said migratory bird treaty act.

SEC. 14. That any person, association, partnership, or corporation who shall violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 15. That for the purposes of this act the word "take" shall be construed to mean pursue, hunt, shoot, capture, collect, kill, or attempt to pursue, hunt, shoot, capture, collect, or kill, unless the context otherwise requires.

SEC. 16. Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing or empowering the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission herein created, the Secretary of Agriculture, or any other board, commission, or officer, to declare, withdraw, or determine, except heretofore designated, any part of any national forest or power site, a migratory bird reservation under any of the provisions of this act, except by and with the consent of the legislature of the State wherein such forest or power site is located.

SEC. 17. That when any State shall, by suitable legislation, make provision adequately to enforce the provisions of this act and all regulations promulgated thereunder, the Secretary of Agriculture may so certify, and then and thereafter said State may cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in the enforcement of this act and the regulations thereunder.

SEC. 18. That a sum sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of the commission and its members, not to exceed an annual expenditure of $5,000, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman of said commission, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon the General Accounting Office as to the correctness of the accounts of said commission.

SEC. 19. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 20. That this act shall take effect upon its passage and approval.

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to have the House amendment lie over for a few minutes before it is passed. I want merely to examine it.

Mr. NORBECK. I suggest that it lie over until 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED of Missouri subsequently said: Mr. President, I asked that action be deferred until I had an opportunity to make an examination of the amendment. I have done so and have no objection to it.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I had previously moved that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from South Dakota what changes were made in the bill by the House?

Mr. NORBECK. Quite a number, but none material except that the authorization for appropriations was materially reduced for the first three years.

Mr. BRATTON. The appropriations for the first three years were reduced?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. BRATTON. In what other way was the Senate bill amended

Mr. NORBECK. Most of the amendments were simply to harmonize the bill. The bill contained a great many amendments offered on the floor of the Senate, and they were a little out of joint with each other. I would say that the only material amendment is the one I have stated, except that the program is to come to a close at the end of 10 years.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I took considerable interest in the bill when it was in the Senate. The House has followed primarily the bill as it passed the Senate. I am very much in favor of the amendment of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the bill in its present form and as it passed the Senate is a vindication of the right of unlimited debate in the Senate. For a number of years certain organizations, and among them certain manufacturers of guns and munitions, tried to drive through the Congress a bill which was very obnoxious. It was a bill in the interest of shooting grounds and imposed upon those who were hunters the duty of obtaining licenses from the Federal Government. Those bills were for years objected to, and many of our friends in the Senate were sometimes very much agitated because of the interposition of objections to the bill and the ensuing discussion.

The present bill is an admirable one, and I think it justifies the opposition which was manifested to the shooting ground bills which for years were promoted by the manufacturers of powder and guns in the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I merely want to take this occasion to state that I opposed the original bill as it was introduced in the Senate. I understand that now the bill as amended by the House is substantially in the same terms as the bill as amended as it passed the Senate, and which I supported, providing for bird sanctuaries and prohibiting the destruction of birds; that it provides for the preservation of the migratory birds and does not provide for public shooting grounds. I therefore favor the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FINAL ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authenticated copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Idaho at the election held therein November 6, 1928, and requesting that it be substituted for the certificate sent on December 15, 1928, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN PORTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the presidents of the Republican and Socialist Parties of Porto Rico, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table, as follows:

[Cablegram]

SAN JUAN, P. R., February 11, 1929.

Hon. CHARLES DAWES,

President United States Senate, Washington:

Caucus senators and representatives Republican-Socialist coalition Porto Rican Legislature, representing over 120,000 voters, earnestly request United States Senate, Senators BINGHAM and BAYARD especially, approve pending bill granting Porto Rican women suffrage. Opposition raised due to local rights legislature is less important that incorporation privilege amendment women suffrage organic act of Porto Rico.

RAFAEL MARTINEZ NADAL,
President Republican Party.
SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
President Socialist Party.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there seems to have been some misunderstanding among my good friends in Porto Rico. I notice a reference to me in this cablegram that has just been handed down by the Vice President. The facts in regard to the situation of woman suffrage in Porto Rico are these:

At the beginning of this Congress I introduced a bill granting to the women of Porto Rico the same rights in regard to voting as the men have, believing that had the Congress, when it gave the men of Porto Rico the right to vote, done so after the nineteenth amendment was adopted, this matter would have been attended to at that time. Instead of that, the right to vote was granted before the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, and consequently the women of Porto Rico have never had the right to vote. But that bill, being referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, was laid upon the table in the committee. I was not successful in persuading a majority of the committee to report it favorably. Later on the House of Representatives passed a similar bill in the House and sent it over to us; and at that time the committee acted favorably, and that bill is now upon the calendar. It has, however, been adversely reported by a minority of the members of that committee, so that the minority report is also upon the calendar.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that under the constitution of Porto Rico the Legislature of Porto Rico has authority to confer suffrage on the women of Porto Rico, if it sees fit to do so, without any help or action at all on the part of the Federal Congress?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true, Mr. President, because when the Congress gave to the Porto Ricans the right to vote they gave to the legislature the right to say who should vote. The place at which my distinguished friend from Maryland and I differ is in this regard: Both of us are strong for local self-government and State rights; but our States, where we learned that, had the right to vote first, before the Union was formed, and we surrendered a certain part of our rights to the United States when the Union was formed. On the other hand, the people of Porto Rico did not have the right to vote until we gave it to them. When we gave it to them, unfortunately, we gave it to them before the nineteenth amendment was passed. Had we given it to them after the nineteenth amendment was passed, I am sure we would have done it in such a way as not to deprive the women of Porto Rico of the right to vote.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not the Senator think that the people of Porto Rico are competent to handle their own affairs down there without coercion or guidance from the Federal Government in this purely local matter?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it would be better if we told them that they must not limit the right to vote by reason of sex.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then where does our policy of State rights begin and end, if we undertake to change it on every little matter of local self-government in which we may differ with them?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the point is that we gave them the right to vote in the first place. They did not have it in the first place as our ancestors did. That is the difference.

Mr. TYDINGS. But it seems to me that the people of Porto Rico are competent to settle that matter for themselves.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with the cablegram referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, a letter that I have received from Mrs. Ana L. de Velez, president of the Porto Rican Association of Women Voters; a reply that I have written thereto; a translation of a letter written by Hon. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA, Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, to Mrs. Velez; the minority report on House bill 7010; and a compilation of the educational qualification provisions in the constitutions or laws of various States made by the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., January 27, 1929.

The Hon. Senator HAYDEN,

United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The island press has released the news that you will be the leader of the opposition to the bill amending our organic law to the effect of granting the women of Porto Rico, American citizens, the right to vote. If this is so, allow us to believe that your attitude must be based on misleading information as to political and social conditions here, particularly regarding women.

For this reason we believe it our duty to bring to your attention, among others, one single fact which will perhaps make you rectify your stand in this matter. We refer to the fact that a large number of American citizens, the women of Porto Rico, have not the electoral franchise in our own land, while with our votes we could change the tide of an election in Continental United States, where Porto Rican women are now exercising the right to vote.

We can assure you that the passage of this law will cause no social revolution in this island as some prejudiced people will have you believe.

The Asociacion Puertorriquena de Mujeres Sufragistas invites you to reconsider this matter so that you may favor instead of opposing it, thus keeping in consonance with the principles of American democracy and earning thereby the gratitude of the women of Porto Rico.

We remain, sir,

Most sincerely yours,

ANA L. DE VELEZ,
Presidenta Asociacion Puertorriquena de Mujeres Sufragistas.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1929.

MRS. ANA L. DE VELEZ,
Presidenta Asociacion Puertorriquena de Mujeres Sufragistas,
San Juan, P. R.

MY DEAR MADAM: I am in receipt of your letter of January 27, and inclose herewith a copy of the minority views on the bill (H. R. 7010) to amend the organic act of Porto Rico, which passed the House of Representatives on December 17, 1928. By reading the report you will be advised as to why the five United States Senators who signed it are opposed to the enactment of that measure.

It is indeed an anomaly that Porto Rican women resident in the continental United States may vote while they are denied that privilege at home. The Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions was informed that the courts have decided that the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting equal suffrage is not operative in Porto Rico, notwithstanding the fact that the people of that island are American citizens.

The question is what is the best way to correct an obviously illogical if not an absurd situation. The Senators who signed the minority report are convinced that the Legislature of Porto Rico is the proper authority to remedy the evil, rather than the Congress of the United States.

Personally I have no fear that giving the electoral franchise to women will cause a social revolution in Porto Rico. Upon the contrary, I have faith that the result would be highly beneficial, just as it was in my own State. I voted for woman suffrage in Arizona when equal rights were granted in 1912, and as a Member of Congress I earnestly supported the amendment to the Federal Constitution which was submitted to the States for ratification in 1919.

Believing that ballots in the hands of ignorant voters are much more to be dreaded than the arms of invading enemies, I am also a firm supporter of an educational qualification for voters. By combining the two proposals, as was contemplated by the Legislature of Porto Rico, the electorate is made to consist of the educated and intelligent members of both sexes.

Behind every ballot there is a direct responsibility for the public welfare which should not be intrusted to the ignorant. Thomas Jefferson, who did more than any other man to establish the principles of American democracy, gave his hearty approval in 1814 to a provision in the proposed new constitution for the Kingdom of Spain, which disfranchised all who could not read and write, by saying:

"This is new, and is the fruitful germ of everything good and the correction of everything imperfect in the present constitution. This will give you an enlightened people and an energetic public opinion which will control and enchain the aristocratic spirit of government."

Two years later Mr. Jefferson said:

"If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."

I hope that the Legislature of Porto Rico shall of its own free will and accord, as it has complete authority to do, pass an act which will grant to all educated citizens the right to vote without regard to sex. These two reforms should be accomplished at one and the same time. If, unfortunately, Congress should determine to impose equal suffrage upon the people of Porto Rico without affording the legislature a further opportunity to act, as is proposed in the bill H. R. 7010, then I shall certainly insist that the bill be amended by adding to it a further proviso reading as follows:

"Provided, however, That no person shall have the right to vote who, not being prevented by physical disability from so doing, shall not be able to read the Constitution of the United States in the English or Spanish language in such manner as to show that he or she is neither prompted nor reciting from memory and write his or her name."

There is precedent for this proposal in the act of April 30, 1900, to provide a government of the Territory of Hawaii, which states that in order to be qualified to vote a person shall—

"be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language."

It seems to me that this was a wise provision, and that if Congress should take action on the subject, which I trust will not be hasty, then the same rule should apply to the English and Spanish languages in Porto Rico.

The amendment to the bill H. R. 7010 which I have drafted is based upon a provision in the constitution of the State of Maine that was also used as a model by the Legislature of Arizona in adopting an educational qualification for voters in 1909, before that Territory was admitted into the Union.

In the act of June 20, 1910, to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and become a State, Congress, to serve a political purpose, ignored and repealed this act of the Territorial legislature and directed that the qualifications of electors should be the same as provided in the revised statutes of Arizona, adopted in 1901. As a result many illiterates voted in the special statehood election of 1911. The people of Arizona bitterly resented this coercive and unwarranted interference with their just right of self-government. The first State legislature in 1912 promptly reenacted the educational qualification law which Congress had destroyed and that law is in effect in my State to-day.

As one born and reared under a Territorial form of government and therefore having personal knowledge of the unsatisfactory conditions which inevitably exist when a distant Congress has power to amend or repeal any law enacted by the local legislature, I can sympathize with the desire of the people of Porto Rico for the largest obtainable measure of local self-government. It shall always be my purpose to resist the arbitrary use of such power by Congress, and, as in the instance of the bill H. R. 7010, I can not consent to the enactment of any such measure until after the Legislature of Porto Rico has had every reasonable opportunity to solve the problem in its own way.

Assuring you of my continued interest in the issue thus presented, I am,

Yours very respectfully,

CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senator.

[S. Rept. No. 1454, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

January 17 (calendar day, January 18), 1929

CONFERRING THE RIGHT TO VOTE UPON PORTO RICAN WOMEN

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE BILL (H. R. 7010) TO AMEND THE ORGANIC ACT OF PORTO RICO, APPROVED MARCH 2, 1917

The undersigned members of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions recommend that the bill (H. R. 7010) to amend the organic act of Porto Rico, approved March 2, 1917, do not pass, because the enactment of such a measure would be an unwarranted interference by Congress with local self-government in Porto Rico.

The organic act, approved March 2, 1917, provides that—

"Voters shall be citizens of the United States 21 years of age or over and have such additional qualifications as may be prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico: Provided, That no property qualification shall ever be imposed upon or required of any voter."

It will be observed that the Legislature of Porto Rico now has full and complete power to extend the right to vote to women of that island.

At a hearing before the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions on an identical bill (S. 753) held on April 25, 1928, it was shown that the Legislature of Porto Rico has recently given serious consideration to the question of woman suffrage. The proposal was to adopt an educational qualification for voters and then permit all qualified citizens, without regard to sex, to vote. The statement of Hon. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA, Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, with respect to the action of the Legislature of Porto Rico is, in part, as follows:

"The bill did not pass the House, but it passed the Senate. We grant in this bill the right to vote to women or men. They will have to know how to read and write, but it will apply equally to men and women.

"There was opposition to the bill in Porto Rico from the Socialist Party, on account of the literacy test, and I believe that is the reason that this bill did not pass the House. They want to vote without any literacy test, and I really believe, Mr. Chairman, that that is necessary. I believe that a literacy test is a good thing, and that it should pass. * * *

"But I maintain that Congress should not legislate in Porto Rican local matters. To be frank, I do not believe you are qualified to legislate in local matters in Porto Rico. You do not know Porto Rico. We are better qualified than you are. So you should let the Porto Ricans handle their own local affairs."

We concur in the views of the duly elected and accredited spokesman for the people of Porto Rico that they should determine this question for themselves without interference by Congress.

JESSE H. METCALF.

[Translation]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1929.

MRS. ANA VELEZ,
President Association of Porto Rican Women Voters,
San Juan, P. R.

MY DISTINGUISHED FRIEND: I am just in receipt of the following cablegram:

"Porto Rican Association of Women Voters energetically protest your attitude against woman suffrage."

I was greatly surprised upon the receipt of the above cablegram. It surprised me, firstly, because it bears your signature, and secondly, for the injustice that it involves.

On the occasion of your visit to Washington, I had the honor to know you personally, and wish to state that I was greatly impressed by your discreet and proper attitude, by your spirit of justice, and by your impartiality. The cablegram sent me does not reveal these qualities, and it is but natural that I should feel so surprised.

You know, as well as all other persons who know me, that I am a sincere adherent of woman suffrage; that I have aways defended the right of women to participate in the development of the public interests on an equal basis with the rights of men. You likewise know that to claim for Porto Rico the right to legislate in our local affairs and to ask that the privilege of suffrage be granted to those who know how to read and write, without distinction of sex, does not constitute an opposition to woman suffrage, but on the contrary, a vigorous help to the rights of women and a healthful measure for the Porto Rican people.

I feel that we should broach this problem openly and frankly and without regard to the results that would individually affect those persons sustaining this opinion. The public interests are supreme and the man or woman who, guided by political conveniences, withhold their support to a measure like this of undeniable benefits for our country, lack in the performance of their duty and fail to obey the dictates of their own conscience. Of course I am referring to those persons who, in their heart of hearts, recognize the healthfulness of this measure yet publicly sustain a different opinion, either because it is agreeable to their political interests or because they lack courage to sustain their convictions.

I am not worried by what can be thought of me nor by the injustices that may be committed against me, attributing to me attitudes that I have not adopted. In this matter, as well as in all others dealing with my country, I respond to my convictions and to my conscience, and will always know how to remain firm and fearless in the performance of my duty.

Very truly yours,

FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a communication in the nature of a petition, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., February 5, 1929.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: The Belvidere Gardens Post of the American Legion of the State of California, in regular meeting, has instructed the vice commander to inform your honorable body that they are heartily in accord with and desire to voice their approval of the measure known as the cruiser bill, and which it is understood is now before the Senate for their consideration.

Respectfully submitted.

CHRISTY J. NELSON,
Vice Commander of the Belvidere Gardens Post of the American Legion, State of California.

Mr. BLAINE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN

Joint resolution 30 (S. 1929), relating to more adequate protection for the farmers of this State who grow sugar beets

Whereas the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States has given notice to the public of hearings preliminary to a general discussion of tariff schedules; and

Whereas the products of agriculture will likely be among the first items to receive the serious attention of Congress; and

Whereas the farmers of Wisconsin have for more than 30 years found the growing of sugar beets a desirable cash-paying proposition and one materially affecting the agricultural welfare of the State; and

Whereas by reason of the large importation of foreign cane sugar into this country free of duty or at tariff rates lower than those imposed by other countries the very life of the domestic industry is threatened; and

Whereas the loss or impoverishment of such an industry would be exceedingly harmful to every phase of the business life of this State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature hereby indorses the action of the Farm Bureau Federation in its effort to secure adequate protection for domestic sugar and to limit the free entry of Porto Rican and Philippine sugar into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. WILLIS C. HAWLEY, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Wisconsin.

Mr. BURTON presented resolutions adopted by the Ohio Farmers' Protective Association, protesting against the imposition of a tariff on lumber, shingles, and logs from Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Paulding, Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Knutson bill, being the bill (H. R. 14676) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions unanimously adopted by the annual convention of the New York State Fish, Game, and Forest League at Saranac Lake, N. Y., which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

NEW YORK STATE FISH, GAME, AND FOREST LEAGUE

* * * * * * *

Whereas there have been idle and unimproved tracts owned by the Federal Government since the period of the late World War, and these tracts are of no substantial value to the Federal Government; and

Whereas one of these tracts, located at Camp Upton, Long Island, could be developed into a fish and game refuge of great value to future generations through the system now operative under the New York State Conservation Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the New York State League of Fish, Game, and Forest Clubs representing 166 fish, game, and conservation organizations in New York State with a total membership in excess of 250,000, in convention assembled at Saranac Lake, N. Y., December 6 and 7, 1928, hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact legislation that will convey outright or for nominal consideration this tract to the government of New York State in the conservation department to be used for the above-named purposes forever; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to both Members of the United States Senate and to every Member of the House of Representatives from New York State, with the request that they initiate and support this project.

LAKE OKEECHOBEE HURRICANE REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a report from Col. Sumter L. Lowry, jr., of the National Guard, in charge of affairs at West Palm Beach during the disaster of the great hurricane of September, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The report is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH
FIELD ARTILLERY, FLORIDA NATIONAL GUARD,
OFFICE OF THE REGIMENTAL COMMANDER,
Tampa, Fla., January 17, 1929.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing herewith a report to the Governor of Florida on the hurricane situation in Lake Okeechobee and its relation to the National Guard.

I have been in command of troops in the Okeechobee area immediately after the last two hurricanes, and my experience has prompted me to make this report in hopes that my recommendations will be carried out with a view to preventing loss of life in the lake when future storms pass that way.

I would be glad to have your comments on this report.

Yours truly,

SUMTER L. LOWRY, JR.,
Colonel One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH
FIELD ARTILLERY, FLORIDA NATIONAL GUARD,
OFFICE OF THE REGIMENTAL COMMANDER,
Tampa, Fla., December 3, 1928.

Subject: Lake Okeechobee hurricane problem.
To: The Governor, State of Florida.
(Through Adjutant General Florida, St. Augustine, Fla.)

1. Two predominating factors in the Okeechobee Lake situation compel the National Guard to regard it as a problem of primary importance to the guard. These factors are:

a. The perpetual likelihood of repeated disasters as long as the physical condition of the lake and surrounding country remain as they are.

b. Even though operations on a comprehensive plan for control of the lake and for effecting refuge work were started immediately, a number of hurricane seasons must pass, because of the magnitude of the operation, before a state of safety from disaster could possibly be reached.

2. Hence, with two equinoxial seasons per annum to face, the problem of possible disaster and of following rescue, police, and rehabilitation work rests squarely before us and commands our attention. Furthermore, the ever-increasing demand for the rich bottom lands of this section as farming land, and the continuous immigration into this territory, multiplies steadily the complications and the difficulties of handling the situation.

3. So long as the Okeechobee district remains open to settlement and lies unprotected as it now is from the "tidal wave" action of the lake, we can anticipate serious loss of life with each hurricane passing over it. Such dikes as exist, and along the northeast shore of the lake, the ridge on which Connors Highway is located, proved to be no protection from this tidal wave action. The hurricane force of the wind acting over so broad a surface and over so shallow a body has every opportunity of literally pushing the water out over its borders, creating the havoc we have witnessed at Moore Haven, at South Bay, and at Taylor Creek sections. The shallowness of the water precludes the possibility, at most points along the shore, of return flow, undertow-like, of the water when it is piled up on the broad flats, and serious flooding is almost inevitable. Once the slight elevation of the shore or protection is topped, the flatness of the country allows of practically a bodily movement of the lake out over the inhabited sections and the tilled flats.

4. The exceedingly flimsy construction common in the buildings of this section also adds to the hazard. It is noteworthy that practically all of the loss of life was due to drowning. Buildings in several cases where they were of average good wood construction, well fastened together, survived the fury of the blow only to be floated off when the flood came, carrying occupants to safety on higher ground or riding out the storm, settling on some remote point with the receding waters. However, in so many cases that it is heart-sickening to remember, the homes of the lake-shore dwellers, in fact, did tumble down about their ears, floating off piece by piece, leaving perhaps an iron range, or bed, and in at least one instance a sewing machine, to mark the spot where a dwelling had been. Light masonry construction will not stand the stress, while massive brick construction will prove only a trap in which to drown unless built well up above probable high-water level.

5. In this connection it is worth while to note that in the Moore Haven disaster the water rose to 8 or 10 feet above the average ground level, while in South Bay the recent storm caused a rise of 10 feet above the lake level, and along Connors Highway in the north end of the lake the water swept 6 to 8 feet over the highway, which itself is 5 or 6 feet above the lake level at that point. These facts are reviewed here to keep fresh in mind the gravity, yes, the terror, of the situation.

6. Some of the most interesting and important elements worthy of consideration in any study of this problem are the evident apathy of the people concerned toward the hazard; their resignation to the fates, as it were, that imposes on them periodic floods of disastrous nature, and the striking mental inertia which apparently prevents their comprehension of the situation. After the disaster they seemed dazed, lost, aimless—which is quite natural, following such a calamity. Notwithstanding this mental condition, many heroic acts are recounted and some striking ingenuity was displayed before and after the storm. One instance was the lashing of a large houseboat in the lock at South Bay, where with violent bailing and pumping the craft was kept afloat and the hundred and fifty souls aboard rode out the storm. But the vast majority of these people need outside aid in time of emergency.

7. Though rich in agricultural possibilities, the lake-shore section is poverty stricken. The work of beneficent organizations through the section is quite well known. Such assets as the inhabitants possessed were destroyed, other than land. Such protection against the lake as these citizens receive will have to come from outside sources; the problem is altogether beyond any possibility of their handling it themselves. The terrible loss of life experienced in these two disasters bears this out.

8. In view of the fact that the duty of recovering the dead, rescue of the living, the initial steps in rehabilitation, the establishment of first communications to the outside world from stricken areas, the organization of initial transportation facilities, including emergency repairs to highways and bridges, all these functions devolving immediately on the National Guard, make it a problem to that organization of great importance.

9. Two times in as many years, now, the National Guard of this State has had to serve in the wake of disaster. Under the circumstances, I feel that some definite plan of action should be formulated, and that this plan should be immediately adopted for future use in situations as they arise.

10. The Okeechobee problem, for the purpose of this discussion, automatically divides itself into three parts:

I. The engineering problem of controlling the lake. Although intensely interesting, this phase must be solved by the State or Federal Government; no recommendation will be made in this report.

II. Precautions to be taken to prevent loss of life before storms occur.

a. While plans are being accomplished for the control of the waters of Lake Okeechobee, plans that will eliminate the possibility of repeated disaster, thousands of people are residing along the lake shore and back country flats now, just as they did before former disasters, and so they will continue to live. The State of Florida should recognize this situation and should take immediate steps to provide means which will prevent such terrible loss of life in any hurricane that may pass that way. While the expense of properly and safely controlling the lake will run into millions of dollars, and completion of the necessary work would consume several years, the cost of providing suitable refuges and maintaining appropriate observation and warning systems to insure that the people would be assembled in them before a disaster would be only a fraction of the former.

b. The population of the probable flood area of the lake can only be approximated at present. A survey should be instituted to determine the numbers, names, and locations of all persons in this section. However, an approximation of some value as to the cost of this work can be arrived at by estimating the housing requirements on the basis of allotting a given number of square feet of area per person in the area to be protected, and arriving by rational methods at the number of buildings necessary.

c. Taking as a unit for study a house to accommodate 100 persons and allowing area on the basis of 6 square feet per person, we arrive at a building of 20 feet by 30 feet. These could be built in standardized units, joined into groups to suit local needs, or constructed separately. The buildings should be fire resistant and of permanent type of construction. They must be designed to resist hurricane wind pressures and withstand relatively violent water action. The type of construction most economical and best adapted to this service would be built on these general specifications:

(1) Wood pile foundation with concrete caps.

(2) Steel frame construction properly braced to withstand a wind pressure of 30 pounds per square foot, and a lateral force on the substructure as may be exerted by the movement of flood waters at an accepted velocity.

(3) Concrete slab floors to support 50 pounds per square foot of live load. Floor to be a safe height above probable flood level.

(4) Side walls and roof of steel framing and covered with corrugated asbestos sheathing, adequately fastened.

(5) Steel sash heavily glazed.

(6) All steel work to be protected by an asphaltum paint. Incidentally the experience of Porto Rico in the recent storm shows that the corrugated asbestos withstood the force practically without failure or damage.

(7) A suitable siren should be placed on each refuge house which could relay warnings all along the lake as they are received from the Weather Bureau.

d. A nominal figure for the cost of these buildings would be $3,000 each. Arbitrarily disposing houses at intervals at about 4 or 5 miles along the lake shore, decreasing the distance between them in the vicinity of settlements, some 50 houses would be necessary. This represents an approximate cost of $150,000 for buildings. Making a nominal allowance for visual and sound signaling systems of $25,000 and $25,000 for several guard stations and possible equipment, we find that an expenditure of $200,000 would in all probability insure the State of Florida and the people of Okeechobee against loss of life in future disasters. These buildings could be used regularly, as the service might demand, for community houses, school buildings, etc., reducing the cost chargeable strictly against storm protection.

e. Were these refuges established, the National Guard should be mobilized on definite advice that a storm is imminent over Okeechobee, moved into the area, and supplement the warnings by requiring inhabitants to go into the refuges. It is understood that the use of troops on a mission of this kind would be resorted to only upon definite and authentic information from the United States Weather Bureau that the lake area would be visited by a storm of sufficient intensity to be a menace to life and property. My inquiry into the last disaster proved by conversation with survivors that they would use these refuges if available. Many people left the area on receipt of warnings, but the suddenness of the disaster caught numbers on the highways, washing them to destruction. Were these building located at frequent intervals along the principal highways, there is little doubt but that practically all could be saved. In extreme emergency or underestimation of population, these refuges could, with some discomfort, accommodate twice as many people as estimated. The duration of the storms is short and no serious hardship would result. With these safety buildings established the section afflicted would become more prosperous and the terrible catastrophes of past years would not be repeated.

f. One of the chief factors in handling a situation of this kind is to quickly determine what the actual conditions are in all towns on the lake. Accurate and authentic information is the only real basis for making correct decisions as to the handling of the problem. In this connection a system is worked out with definite assignments to various officers of the 116th Field Artillery whereby these officers, without instructions from the regimental commander, will immediately go to their assigned points, thoroughly investigate the results of the storm, hurriedly ascertain the needs of the people, and immediately get out of the area and make a personal report by telephone or telegraph to the regimental commander. The assignment is attached to this report as Appendix "A."

III. Action to be taken by the National Guard after a storm has passed through an area.

a. This work consists of the following detailed operations:

(1) Establishing a central military headquarters from which all operations can be directed.
(2) Organization of troops into relief details and assignment to sectors.
(3) Transportation of troops into stricken areas by—
  (a) Rail.
  (b) Motor transport.
  (c) Motor boat.
  (d) Airplane.
(4) Establishing communication with outside world:
  (a) Repairing telephone and telegraph lines.
  (b) Establishing radio communication.
  (c) Courier.
(5) Publishing from central military headquarters at noon each day an official military communique, giving the public accurate knowledge of conditions in the area as they exist.
(6) Reorganizing transportation facilities:
  (a) Establishing truck lines where necessary.
  (b) Cooperation with railroads.
  (c) Emergency repairs to roads and bridges.
  (d) Arranging for adequate water craft for lake transportation.
(7) Police activity in cooperation with local authorities.
(8) Rescue of the living from danger and recovery of bodies.
(9) Supply of quarters and rations to refugees in emergency cases.
(10) Coordination of activities and cooperation with relief organizations.

11. The question of police regulations is important. Under the stunning effect of these disasters it has been found impossible for local authorities to organize survivors into relief units for the various necessary operations. Here the troops fill a very distinct breach, and it is my opinion that local authorities should in fact turn over police authority and all relief organizations to the commanding officers of the various relief detachments. Centralized control is of vital importance, and for the first few days after a disaster full control by the military is the most efficient way of meeting the situation. It is not desirable that the troops be continued in control when the civil authorities and permanent relief organizations have become organized and established.

12. The coordination of the activities of relief and benefit organizations is of great importance. These should operate under general direction of the military, certainly during initiation of activities. The troops invariably are first on the scene. They have first authentic information of the conditions that exist, and are therefore best qualified to guide the initial relief work of these organizations.

13. Requisitions for supplies should all be checked through one headquarters in order to coordinate the supply and eliminate overlapping and waste. This should properly be the central military commander's headquarters. This is most important, as past experience has shown that a great amount of money and supplies are wasted for lack of proper distribution.

14. As conditions improve and become normal and the troops are withdrawn, direction of further relief and of rehabilitation should be turned over to the organization best qualified to properly direct it.

15. It is my belief that the National Guard should be ready at all times to mobilize on short notice to cope with a situation of this nature. It is my recommendation that the entire Okeechobee district be definitely assigned to the One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery for all relief work. The proximity of troops on the north and west, with excellent communication, the probability that troops in Miami and West Palm Beach will be busy with storm problems in their own cities, and with experience in previous disasters behind us, this unit is well situated and qualified to organize and handle this problem.

(16) In addition to the above features in connection with this problem, suitable action should immediately be taken to make it possible for the military commander of a district to have authority to request airplane or seaplane assistance from the Pensacola Naval Station without having to go through the complicated system now in effect to secure this aid.

(17) To sum up this report I make the following recommendations in connection with the Okeechobee hurricane area:

(a) That this district be assigned to the One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery to organize and operate before and after a disaster.

(b) That refuge houses be built along the plan outlined and based on actual survey of the true situation.

(c) That authority be given for the district National Guard commander to call direct for naval air station assistance.

(d) That appropriate observation and signal systems be established on the lake.

(e) That accurate information on storm conditions be sent by the Weather Bureau to a central point on the lake to be broadcast from refuge to refuge by signal and siren system.

APPENDIX A

General Orders, No. 16

I. ASSIGNMENT OF AREAS FOR STORM RECONNAISSANCE

1. In view of the severe property damage and loss of life occasioned by hurricane winds in the region of Lake Okeechobee within the past two years, and guided by the fact that it invariably becomes the duty of the National Guard to render aid to the stricken inhabitants of this portion of the State at such a time, the following assignment of areas for the purpose of storm-damage reconnaissance is made:

Headquarters Battery One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery, Fort Myers, Fla.: Fort Myers and all towns on Lake Okeechobee from Lakeport to Clewiston, both inclusive.

Headquarters Battery Fifty-sixth Field Artillery Brigade, Avon Park, Fla.: Okeechobee City and all towns on the west side of Lake Okeechobee from Lake Okeechobee City to Lakeport and all towns on the east side of Lake Okeechobee from Okeechobee City to Utopia, inclusive.

Battery F, One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery, Arcadia, Fla.: Punta Gorda and all towns on south and east side of Lake Okeechobee from Clewiston to Utopia.

First Battalion, One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery, Tampa, Fla.: All cities on Gulf Coast from Englewood to Cedar Keys, both towns inclusive.

2. As soon as definite, authentic information is received that a storm of hurricane force has struck in the area herein assigned to a unit, the commanding officer of that unit, accompanied by such officers of his post as he deems necessary to accomplish his mission, will immediately go into the area and make a personal reconnaissance of his sector; he will investigate the results of the storm, ascertain the needs of the people, and will then proceed as quickly as possible to the nearest available line of communication—telephone, telegraph, radio, etc.—and notify the regimental commander of the results of his reconnaissance.

3. The necessity for rapid work on the part of the officer or officers making the post-storm reconnaissance should be apparent to all. It is necessary that accurate information from a responsible person be quickly received by the regimental commander in order that effective plans for relief work may be made.

4. At least one officer will be left at home station to prepare the unit for the field. This officer should be instructed to notify all members to hold themselves in readiness for a call to active service, and he will make plans for a speedy and effective mobilization of the command.

By order of Colonel Lowry.

GEORGE E. GRACE,
Captain, One hundred and sixteenth Field Artillery,
Adjutant.

A bill (H. R. 5287) for the relief of Etta C. Sanborn (Rept. No. 1708);

A bill (H. R. 5288) for the relief of William F. Kallweit (Rept. No. 1709); and

A bill (H. R. 5289) for the relief of Loretta Kallweit (Rept. No. 1710).

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12638) for the relief of David A. Wright, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1711) thereon.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5030) for the relief of Eva Broderick, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1712) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13632) for the relief of Ruth B. Lincoln, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1713) thereon.

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4937) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1715) thereon.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN UTAH

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) to authorize the exchange of certain public lands in the State of Utah and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That when the public interests will be benefited thereby the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, within township 7 north, ranges 2 and 3 west, and townships 8, 9, and 10 north, ranges 2, 3, 4, and 5 west, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture are chiefly valuable for the purposes contemplated under the act approved April 23, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 448), and in exchange therefor may patent not to exceed an equal value of surveyed unappropriated lands owned by the United States within the said townships nonmineral in character: Provided, That before any such exchange is effected notice of the contemplated exchange reciting the lands involved shall be published once each week for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands to be accepted and in some like newspaper published in the county in which may be situated any lands to be given in such exchange.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 398) to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is an identical Senate joint resolution favorably reported. I ask that the House joint resolution may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the first section of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1924, as amended by joint resolutions approved March 3, 1927, and May 28, 1928, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1929," wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1930."

SEC. 2. The present members of the joint committee created by section 3 of such joint resolution approved June 5, 1924, as amended, if reelected to the Seventy-first Congress, shall continue to serve, notwithstanding the expiration of the Seventieth Congress, until the end of the first regular session of the Seventh-first Congress, at which time such joint committee shall cease to exist. In case a vacancy occurs in such joint committee by reason of the retirement from Congress on March 4, 1929, of any Member of the House of Representatives, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, before the expiration of the Seventieth Congress, appoint a Member of the House to fill such vacancy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate Joint Resolution 207 will be indefinitely postponed.

HOUSE BILL AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 16878) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 51) to appoint a committee from the Senate and House to represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., October 15 to 20, 1929, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 5769) authorizing the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, jointly or severally, to construct, maintain, purchase, and operate one or more toll or free bridges not exceeding three, together with approaches thereto, across the Missouri River at points suitable to navigation at or near said cities; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McMASTER:

A bill (S. 5770) to pay judgment rendered by the United States Court of Claims to Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 5771) granting a pension to Anna M. Cole (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5772) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Bubar (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5773) granting a pension to Telesphore Thivierge (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAWES:

A bill (S. 5774) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5775) authorizing the removal, relocation, and reconstruction of the Saluria Coast Guard Station on the Texas coast so as to place it at a point more adaptable to Coast Guard purposes in the vicinity of Pass Cavallo; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 5776) for the relief of Wynona A. Dixon; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5777) granting an increase of pension to May F. Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Idaho:

A bill (S. 5778) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 5779) to establish the Badlands National Monument in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing that it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export arms, munitions, implements, or other articles for use in war to any country violating the provisions of the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, and declaring it to be the policy of the United States that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of said treaty; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Maj. Arthur A. Padmore, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11422) for the relief of Samuel J. D. Marshall, and it was rereferred to the Committee on Claims.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer three amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 208, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. Later on I shall file the views of the minority upon the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place insert the following:

"To reimburse the Economics Building Co., of Washington, D. C., for actual expenditures made by it in the erection of the Economics Building, exclusive of taxes, in accordance with the provisions of the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1926, approved July 3, 1926, $25,000."

PROPOSED AIRPORT COMMITTEE FOR THE DISTRICT

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 326), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Whereas it is vital to the resources of the Capital of the United States that its airport facilities should be adequate for present and anticipated aviation needs, in order that Washington's equipment in this respect should serve maximum Capital requirements and reflect the Capital's national leadership; and

Whereas this important problem involves not only municipal facilities but also Federal facilities and a proper consideration of the relationships between them; and

Whereas comprehensive inquiry and recommendation requires simultaneous study of such ports and fields as may be maintained for the use and benefit of the War Department, the Navy Department, the Post Office Department, the Commerce Department, and the municipality; and

Whereas this multilateral problem involves considerations ordinarily referred to six separate committees of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That there is hereby created a special select committee of seven Senators to be known as the airport committee, which is authorized and directed to investigate the needs for airports and aviation fields of the War Department, the Navy Department, the Post Office Department, the Department of Commerce, and the District of Columbia, and to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations of sites, plans, and suitable allocation of costs. The committee shall be composed of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the District of Columbia, who shall be chairman, and one Senator, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, from each of the following committees: Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Commerce, District of Columbia, Post Offices and Post Roads, and Appropriations. The President of the Senate shall appoint Members to fill any vacancies that shall occur in the committee, except that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the District of Columbia shall succeed to the chairmanship.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventieth and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to employ such counsel, experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $2,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, MOUNTAIN LAKE SANCTUARY, FLORIDA

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the splendid address delivered by the President at Mountain Lake, Fla., dedicating the Mountain Lake Sanctuary and the singing tower presented by Mr. Edward W. Bok to the American people on February 1, 1929.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The address is as follows:

Our country is giving an increasing amount of attention to art. We have reached a time when our people have more leisure for enjoyment and more means for gratifying their taste. Even during its colonial history it was not without some progress in this direction. Very early it produced painters of historic merit. Some of the architecture of the eighteenth century continues to hold a very high place, but with the exception of a few public buildings these creations were for private use and reached but a few people.

While the United States has been by no means lacking in spiritual vision, and, considering the circumstances of its surroundings, has been remarkable in the devotion of its religious life, yet, being new and undeveloped, it has been necessary for our people first of all to give their attention to the material side of existence. We have been forced to get things done. We have been required to build cities, improve harbors, open mines, cut down forests, lay out great systems of transportation, till the soil, erect factories, open banks, and develop commerce. We have been making a new nation out of raw materials. What others have done in many centuries we have crowded into the short space of 300 years. It is only in the last generation that the great body of our people have been sufficiently relieved from the pressing necessities of existence so that they could give some thought to the art of living.

It is significant of our institutions and of the spirit of our national life that in the opening up of the new era we have attempted to give to the people at large what in other days had been enjoyed only by a fortunate and privileged few. This effort began with popular education. The free public school, the endowed academy and college, the high school, and the State University were the beginnings of this movement. They have more recently been supplemented by public art galleries, popular concerts for the presentation of the best music, and the opening of innumerable public parks. The useful and the practical is being supplemented by the artistic and the beautiful.

This has been done in no small and niggardly way but on a vast scale representing an outlay of many hundred millions of dollars.

Many people have given large sums to these purposes, and municipal, State, and national resources have been employed in ever-increasing amounts.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the organization of the material side of existence has been completed. It is more likely that it has only just begun. But it has progressed far enough so that a moderate amount of industry and thrift is all that is needed to relieve the great mass of our people from the pinch of poverty, and when these are supplemented with such training and skill as it is possible for almost anyone to acquire, to raise them to a position of comparative affluence. Above this line there are an increasing number of individuals who have sufficient resources to enable them to minister in a most substantial way to the humanitarian and artistic side of life. Some of the largest fortunes which were ever accumulated in the United States have been almost entirely devoted to such charities.

We can not observe this movement without smiling a little at those who but a short time ago expressed so much fear lest our country might come under the control of a few individuals of great wealth. They claimed that the rich were growing richer and the poor were growing poorer. Our experience has demonstrated that the reverse of this would be much nearer the truth. So many of our people have large amounts of property that it has taken on the aspect of being common. The distinction that it once carried is gone. It is also doubtful if there ever was a time when even great wealth gave its possessors so little power as at present. Their money is of very little value in determining political action. Capital is so easily secured for any promising enterprise that it is no longer necessary to be rich to go into business, even on an extensive scale. The possession of money has never been sufficient to gain the social attentions of persons of culture and refinement.

On the other hand, the advantages that are enjoyed by people of moderate means, including the great mass of wage earners, were never so great as they are at present. Not only is their income proportionately greater than ever before but their whole method of life, their opportunities to secure benefits which but a short time ago were the exclusive possession of the rich, have been tremendously increased. I have already referred to the broadening field of education. Another new element is the wide use of the automobile. Whole families are able to have the beneficial results of travel at an outlay which is so small that it is practically within the reach of everyone. Within the last few years the radio has come to afford entertainment and instruction to a great body of our people. Through these instrumentalities the vision has been extended to embrace the wide circle of our rich scenery, and the hearing has been amplified so that it may listen to the eloquence and music of many distant places. Through the medium of the motion picture all that is attractive and instructive in the art of acting and the presentation of scenery is to be had at a very moderate cost. All of this has greatly enriched the life of those who were recently looked upon as poor.

These grounds which we are dedicating to-day are another extension of this rapidly developing movement. It has been designated as a sanctuary because within it people may temporarily escape from the pressure and affliction of the affairs of life and find that quiet and repose which comes from a closer communion with the beauties of nature. We have not secured the benefits which I have enumerated without being obliged to pay a price. The multiplicity and the swiftness of the events with which we are surrounded exhaust our nervous energy. The constant impact upon us of great throngs of people of itself produces a deadening fatigue. We have a special need for a sanctuary like this to which we can retreat for a time from the daily turmoil and have a place to rest and think under the quieting influence of nature and of nature's God.

It is not only through action but through contemplation that people come to understand themselves. Man does not live by bread alone. This thought is expressed in the motto of the sanctuary in the words of John Burroughs: "I come here to find myself. It is so easy to get lost in the world." We are so thickly crowded with the forest of events that there is not only danger that we can not see the trees, but that we may lose our sense of direction. Under the influence of these beautiful surroundings we can pause unhampered while we find out where we are and whither we are going. Those who come here report the feeling of peace which they have experienced. In the expression of an ancient writer, it is a place to which to invite one's soul, where one may see in the landscape and foliage not what man has done but what God has done.

The main purpose of this sanctuary and tower is to preach the gospel of beauty. Although they have been made possible through the generosity of Mr. Edward W. Bok, he does not wish them to be considered as a memorial or a monument. While it has been his purpose to give some expression here to his own love of the beautiful in form, in color, and in sound, he has also sought to preserve the quiet majesty of the trees, increase the display of coloring in the flowers, and combine stone and marble in the graceful lines of the tower, all in a setting surrounded by green foliage and reflected in sparkling waters over which the song of the nightingale will mingle with the music of the bells.

As the tourist and the traveler in search of recreation and a change from the more rigorous climate of the North come to this wonderful State of perpetual springtime and summer, they can pause and think how much our country can profit by cultivating an appreciation and understanding of the beautiful in nature and in art as they are here combined. The material prosperity of our Nation will be of little avail unless it is translated into a spiritual prosperity. We need a deeper realization of the value and power of beauty. While few have the means to present such a gorgeous display as will here strike the eye and the ear, it is well to remember that beauty is not dependent upon large areas or great heights. Some of the most appealing and fascinating homes in the world are small. They may represent but little outlay and be the abode of people of moderate means, but if there dwells a fine character within it will shine forth and give to all the surroundings a touch of peace and loveliness which the most spacious palace can not surpass.

Wherever communities are formed there is ample opportunity for this kind of expression. Those who visit here can not escape taking away with them an inspiration for better things. They will be filled with a noble discontent which can not fail to react in some degree against all forms of physical and spiritual ugliness. They will go forth as missionaries of the beautiful because of what they have seen and heard. The streets of distant towns will be cleaner. Lawns will be better kept. A larger number of trees will spread their verdant shade over highways and homes. Public buildings will take on more beautiful lines, making life more graceful and more complete. Certainly, we need to put more emphasis on improvements of such a nature.

The influence of an example like this is always contagious. The noticeable improvement of architecture in this country had its inception in the exhibition of the fine buildings of the World's Fair at Chicago. The five years following the fair at San Francisco changed the whole face of the State of California. This combination of influences has resulted in the recent enactments of Congress to span the Potomac with a memorial bridge and adorn the avenues of the Capital City with stately public buildings. Already there is a very healthy and beneficial competition in this field among various cities of the United States. Civic centers are being laid out with spacious squares surrounded by public buildings which will reflect the power and dignity of the beautiful in community life.

This sanctuary and tower are not only endowed with a beauty of their own, but they are a representation of the beneficent spirit of the giver. They are another illustration that the men of wealth of the United States are not bent on the accumulation of money merely for its own sake, or that they may use it in selfish and ostentatious display. A most cursory examination of the facts would soon disclose that our country leads the world in its charities and endowments. It would be difficult to recall any line of endeavor capable of ministering to human welfare, not only in our own country but in many places abroad, which is not being helped by the generosity of our people of wealth. Not only that, but the charities of this Nation stand on a plane which is occupied by them alone. They have never been tainted with any effort to hold back the rising tide of a demand for the abolition of privilege and the establishment of equality, but have rather been the result of a sincere philanthropy. They have not come from any class consciousness; certainly, not from any class fear. They represent in all its beauty and purity the love of man and the desire to benefit the human race. We have a strong sense of trusteeship. While giving every credit to the genius of management, and holding strongly to the right of individual possessions, we realize that to a considerable extent wealth is the creation of the people, and it is fitting, as in this case, that it should be expended for their material, intellectual, and moral development.

While there is much to be said for the statement that there is nothing new in the world, there are yet many things that are new in our country. In the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and England the carillon has been in existence for hundreds of years. It goes back to the fourteenth century. In the Netherlands, which supplied the inspiration for this singing tower, a community that does not have a carillon is not regarded as complete. While in the United States we have always been accustomed to the bells of the churches, and later to their use in transportation and industry, yet the carillon has been very little appreciated. Only a few have been built. This singing tower only brings our entire number up to 30. It will take its place, therefore, of giving our people what is to them a comparatively new form of music, as they have the pleasure of listening to its melodious cadence. It contains 61 bells and is the largest and heaviest ever cast in a single order. So intricate is the task of turning them out perfectly tuned and in complete harmony that their construction has taken nearly a year. The people of this locality have already been listening to them, and in the future the beauty of their song will impress itself upon the endless line of coming generations. As they gaze upon the structure which holds them and are moved by their music, it will all blend in one harmonius whole and more and more they will realize the significance of the designation given to such structures by the Dutch of "singing tower."

This wonderful work, with all its loveliness of form, of color, and of sound, is another evidence of the breadth and completeness of the life of our Republic. We should find, if we sought for it, a considerable literature undertaking to prove the necessity of a ruling class for national political well-being and the need of a privileged nobility as the best method of providing for the cultural and artistic life of a people. It is not to be denied that under such a system, when tempered with a wholesome regard for liberty under the law, there has been great progress. But in many respects it is of a narrow and limited nature. The brilliance at the top of the social structure has always been insufficient to furnish light for the great mass of the people. When we erected our institutions on the basic theory of equality, our ability under such conditions to produce the finer things of life was immediately challenged. The correctness of our theory has been more and more demonstrated by the course of events. We have been able to raise up individuals who stand out in history undimmed by any comparisons to which they can be subjected. Our artistic growth has been constant and in its individual examples and its general application is not excelled by any other people. In its main purpose to create a nation and increase intelligence, stability, and character, our Republic has met with unexampled success. It has been thoroughly demonstrated that the principle of equality is sound. Our institutions have endowed our people with insight and vision. The individual has been developed, the Nation has become great. The belief that there is nothing which our people can not do, and no power which our people ought not to have, has been the main source of our progress. Faith in our people stands vindicated beyond further discussion. Into their hands we have entirely intrusted the future destiny of our Nation.

It is a trait of human nature to wish to personify its ideals. This is the chief reason that the kingly office continued to exist after it had served its main purpose of being sufficiently skilled in military leadership so as to increase the order and security of the country. The people found it easier to have their conception of sovereignty embodied in a personality. The monarch reflected the greatness which came from them. It was very seldom that he created it. It was much easier under those circumstances to secure a response when calling on the people to make sacrifices for the national welfare. They felt they were doing it for the king. They could see him in person and hear his expression of approbation. For his glorification not only were men willing to take up arms, but they found in him an inspiration for their art. Their music, their literature, their sculpture, and their painting dealt with royal subjects. Even Shakespeare gave royal titles to a number of his productions.

In the course of long human experience actions of this nature are not accidental. If they did not serve some useful purpose in the development of the race, either they would not have occurred at all or would have been of a transitory nature. They persisted because they gave the people a better conception of the abstract idea of national unity and national sovereignty. Even when our own Constitution was adopted this idea was so firmly intrenched that it was with great difficulty and hesitation that the people of that period were able to cast aside the idea of a personal sovereignty. That they did so stamped their action as extremely revolutionary. But finally our Nation and our States have planted themselves squarely and securely on the theory that all the powers of government emanate from the people. They stand as our sovereign. They are our national monarch. That act was a recognition of their own inalienable nobility.

Gradually, for complete revolutions do not occur in a day, we have transferred our allegiance to the people. It is for them that our songs are made, our books are published, our pictures are painted, our public squares are adorned, our park systems are developed, and the art of the stage and screen is created. While these things are done by individuals, this movement is "of the people, by the people, and for the people." It is no accident that this superb creation which we are dedicating to-day is the conception of a man whose only heritage was that of good breeding, an American by adoption, not by birth, who has felt the pinch of poverty, who has experienced the thrill of hard manual labor, and who has triumphed over many difficulties. Edward W. Bok is making this contribution in recognition of his loyalty to his sovereign, the people. It is another demonstration that when they are given the opportunity the people have the innate power to provide themselves with the wealth, the culture, the art, and the refinements that support an enlightened civilization.

Now, therefore, in a spirit of thankfulness for the success of our institutions, which is here attested, and appreciation of the munificent generosity, which is here exhibited, in my capacity as President of the United States, I hereby dedicate this Mountain Lake Sanctuary and its Singing Tower and present them for visitation to the American people.

PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA FALLS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence between myself and Governor Roosevelt, of New York, with reference to the recent message of the President transmitting to the Senate for its ratification a convention and protocol between the United States and Great Britain (Canada) for the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The correspondence is as follows:

FEBRUARY 2, 1929.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The State Capitol, Albany, N. Y.

Your attention is invited to the recent message of the President transmitting to the Senate for its ratification a convention and protocol between the United States and Great Britain (Canada) for the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls.

The convention provides that the two nations agree that remedial works be constructed at Niagara Falls designed to preserve and enhance their scenic value, and that, in addition to the diversion of water presently permitted under the treaty of 1909, further diversion be authorized at a rate not exceeding 10,000 cubic feet per second on the American side, and 10,000 cubic feet per second on the Canadian side during the nontourist season from October 1 to March 31 for a period of seven years. The proctocol signed simultaneously with the convention provides that the remedial works shall be constructed in accordance with the recommendations theretofore made by the Special International Niagara Board.

The history of the negotiations which led to the signing of these instruments at Ottawa, on January 2, 1929, is briefly as follows:

In 1925 a special international Niagara board, consisting of Canadian and American representatives, was established and requested to inquire into and report upon the measures and works necessary to preserve and improve the beauty of the Falls, and to determine what additional diversion of water from the Falls might be permitted consistently with the full preservation of their scenic value. In partial compliance with this request the Special International Niagara Board submitted a report on December 14, 1927, which recommended the construction of various weirs and works in the Niagara River above the Falls of an estimated cost of $1,750,000, calculated to insure an unbroken crest line from shore to shore.

On April 9, 1928, the Hydroelectric Power Commission, of Ontario, and the Niagara Falls Power Co., of New York, jointly offered to construct, at their own expense, the works recommended by the Special International Niagara Board, subject to certain conditions, amongst which were the following: "(2) The board (i. e., the Special International Niagara Board) will use its best efforts to assist the commission and the company (i. e. the Hydroelectric Power Commission, of Ontario, and the Niagara Falls Power Co., of New York) to obtain from all governmental authorities whose consent is required by law the necessary permits for the construction of the proposed works.

"(5) To permit observation of the effects of remedial works * * * the amount of water which, under the international treaty, may be diverted for power purposes from the Niagara River above the Falls on each side of the river, shall be increased by an amount not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second during the nontourist season, from October 1 to March 31, inclusive, yearly."

This offer the Special International Niagara Board recommended for acceptance, with the limitation that the diversion shall not be prolonged beyond a period of seven years.

To carry out that recommendation the convention and protocol were signed.

This arrangement, if ratified, makes possible the preservation of the Falls at no cost to the Government. It affords an opportunity for observation and experimentation during the nontourist seasons for a temporary period of seven years to determine whether any diversion beyond that now authorized may be permitted without injury to the scenic grandeur of the Falls. Although at present the United States is allotted only 35 per cent of the water diverted at the Falls, it will receive fully 50 per cent of the additional diversion during this period of experimentation. There is nothing in the convention or protocol which conflicts with such interests as the Federal Government claims in the waters of the Niagara River or the water power developed therefrom.

The matter is not quite as clear in so far as the interests of New York State are concerned. It is for that reason that I have submitted these facts for your consideration and invite an expression of your views and your counsel, to the end that the policy of New York State with respect to its water power shall not be thwarted, and its rights, both sovereign and proprietary to the water and water power of the Niagara, shall not be surrendered.

The development of power from falling water is comparatively a new element in our economic life and necessarily so in our jurisprudence. The relative rights of the Federal Government, the State, and the riparian owners of land upon navigable and boundary streams remain yet to be explored and defined. On the Niagara River the uncertainty is intensified by reason of the legislation enacted by the State legislature at various times concerning the Niagara River and the Niagara Falls Power Co. (1886, 1889, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1918, and 1921.)

The precise questions are—

First. Do you favor the proposal to have the work of preserving the Falls undertaken at private expense and simultaneously therewith making available for private utilization by the Niagara Falls Power Co. the additional water to be diverted under the convention for a temporary period?

Second. Does the State of New York claim that its consent is prerequisite before any disposition can be made of the additional 10,000 cubic feet per second made available by the convention?

Third. Does the State of New York claim the right to charge for the use of such additional water the rental provided for in subdivision 13 of section 613 of the conservation law?

Both the convention and the protocol are silent on these matters.

In the normal case I should be of the opinion that the State is possessed of the rights mentioned in the questions and that the Federal Government is powerless to infringe upon them. I have not, however, the information at hand necessary for a determination whether the Niagara Falls Power Co. is, by virtue of a special grant or otherwise, outside the sphere of the general rule.

In considering the broad question of approval or disapproval, regard should also be had for the relative value of that which the State receives and that which it gives. It is estimated that the present facilities of the Niagara Falls Power Co. can develop from the additional water made available a maximum of 80,000 kilowatts.

I need hardly add that were this a proposal for a totally new grant of water power for private development rather than a temporary experimentation, I would be unalterably opposed to it. As you well know, I advocate that the State retain the ownership and control of water power at its source.

I have tried to lay my thoughts on the pending treaty before you and I shall appreciate an expression of your views. New York State is most directly concerned and the Senate will undoubtedly desire to be advised of the position of its chief executive.

Very cordially yours,

ROBERT F. WAGNER.

NIAGARA TREATY

STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, February 9, 1929.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: I have delayed answering your letter of February 2 for several days, because it brings up a matter very vital to the interests of the people of the State of New York. You ask me three specific questions in regard to the attitude of this State concerning the convention signed at Ottawa between representatives of the United States and the Government of Canada in relation to the diversion of water in the Niagara River above Niagara Falls.

This convention is intended primarily to preserve the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls by preventing rapid erosion of the center of the crest of the Falls through erection of weirs or other structures in the bed of the river above the Falls on both the New York side and the Ontario side, thus diverting sufficient water to the wings of the Falls.

This convention is the result of careful study made by the International Niagara Board, and this board worked out a plan under which an offer of the Hydroelectric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Co., a private corporation of New York State, was recommended for acceptance.

Under this offer the Ontario commission and the New York private corporation agreed to build the necessary weirs and structures in the bed of the river and asked in return the use, for a period of seven years, during the six winter months of each year, of 10,000 cubic feet per second of water on each side of the river.

It is estimated that this 10,000 cubic feet per second on the American side would enable the Niagara Falls Power Co. to develop between 80,000 and 100,000 horsepower.

SAYS STATE WAS IGNORED

First of all I want to call your attention to the important fact that quite aside from the merits of this proposal the State of New York was in no way invited to participate in the discussions attending this proposal; to the second important fact that the proposed weirs and structures would have to be erected on the bed of the Niagara River owned by the State of New York; and to the third important fact that use of 10,000 cubic feet per second proposed to be withdrawn depends on the consent of the State of New York to that withdrawal and to the satisfying of the State of New York that if it is withdrawn the people of the State are to receive an adequate rental for this water.

In regard to the three categorical questions you ask me, I beg to advise you as follows:

First. In pursuance of its long-standing policy the State of New York requires that its consent is prerequisite before any disposition can be made of the additional 10,000 feet per second of water made available for power development by the convention.

Second. In pursuance of the same policy of long standing, the State of New York requires a charge for the use of such additional water, said charge or rental being determined in pursuance of the statutes of the State.

Third. In your other question you ask whether the State accepts the proposal to have the work of preserving the Falls undertaken at private expense and at the same time making available for private utilization by the Niagara Falls Power Co. of the additional water to be diverted under the convention for a temporary period.

ANALYZES SCOPE OF TREATY

A careful reading of the proposed convention discloses the fact that the letter of the Secretary of State transmitting the convention refers to a protocol to be agreed to between the United States and Canada. The protocol itself is appended to the convention and the protocol refers to the recommendations of the International Niagara Board.

In other words, the three documents must be read together, and it becomes at once clear that the treaty itself is essentially an agreement to carry out a specific plan heretofore adopted.

If the State of New York offers no objection to the ratification of the treaty by the Senate of the United States, the State may by inference be bound to the acceptance of the plan worked out between the International Niagara Board on the one side and the Ontario Power Commission and the Niagara Falls Power Co. on the other.

My easiest course, as governor, would have been to ask you and your colleague in the United States Senate to oppose the ratification of the treaty as strongly as possible on the ground that the treaty ties the hands of the State of New York as to the methods by which the beautification and diversion can be arrived at, and forces the State to accept the offer of the Niagara Falls Power Co.

STATE WILLING TO COOPERATE

I think I can speak for the whole State in telling you that we want to cooperate with the Federal Government and the Congress of the United States in every way possible to aid in the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls and the Niagara River.

That is why, instead of direct opposition to the ratification of the treaty, I have tried in a spirit of cooperation to enter into a plan by which the scenic beauty of the Falls can be preserved and at the same time all of the rights of the people of the State of New York in and to their property and governmental powers can be equally retained.

After a number of conferences I am glad to say that I have been able to obtain from the Niagara Falls Power Co. a written stipulation, duly executed by it, which stipulation fully preserves the property rights and governmental authority of this State.

I might note the following facts in regard to the Niagara Falls Power Co.:

1. It is the only private company now in a position immediately and economically to utilize the proposed experimental diversion of the additional 10,000 cubic feet per second of water.

2. The Niagara Falls Power Co. has for a number of years been paying a rental to the State of New York for the water which it is now using.

3. The Niagara Falls Power Co. has paid this rental to the State under protest.

The stipulation signed by the Niagara Falls Power Co. agrees that if it is allowed to use for seven years the additional water obtained from this experimental diversion it will, firstly, withdraw all objections to the payment of the rental now being charged by the State for existing water, and, secondly, will agree to pay such equitable rental for the additional experimental supply as may be determined by the State under the water power act, and, thirdly, will recognize the necessity of obtaining a license from the State for the use of this experimental water.

This is a complete recognition of the right and sovereignty of the State of New York to license and to rent all water now being used by the company and all water to be used under the provisions of the convention and protocol.

OLD DISPUTE CLEARED AWAY

It is, of course, clear that the proposed treaty with Canada is a temporary measure, only running for the diversion period of only seven years, and that the State of New York is in no way restricted as to its full control of this water after the 7-year period has run.

The stipulation received by the State of New York clears up the matters long in dispute between it and the private company and makes it perfectly clear that the State has the full sovereignty and control over the water on the American side of the Niagara River for all time.

I am very happy that the State by this stipulation obtains all that it has in the past claimed from the Niagara Falls Power Co. as its rights at this particular site, and that the State can contribute in a constructive way in the beautification of the Falls, which is the primary object of this convention.

It is, of course, obvious that though the factor of scenic beauty exists in this particular case, it should not be considered in any way as modifying the policy of this State at other power sites in regard to the development of water power under direct State control and possession.

The State reserves, of course, every right to make a different arrangement at the termination of the 7-year period should the diversion be made permanent or be increased.

I hope that I have made my position clear in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article written by Mr. William P. Helm, jr., published in the Washington Post of yesterday, relative to prohibition enforcement.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

McBRIDE TELLS HOPES OF DRYS FROM HOOVER—SPEEDING UP ENFORCEMENT, ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE'S FIRST DEMAND—PROPOSE CAMPAIGN TO EDUCATE NATION—WOULD HAVE THE GOVERNMENT ADVERTISE PROHIBITION TO THE PEOPLE

By William P. Helm, jr.

"What does the Anti-Saloon League expect of Herbert Hoover?"

F. Scott McBride, the league's general superintendent, answers the question, in substance, as follows:

First, a speeding up of prohibition enforcement. Effective use of as much money as the Government needs—whether it be an additional $10,000,000 a year, $24,000,000, or $100,000,000—to enforce the law. And a nation-wide "campaign of education" to sell law enforcement to the American public.

"How could such a campaign be conducted, Doctor McBride?"

"By bulletins and posters, millions of them, and in other ways."

"Paid for by the Federal Treasury?"

"Yes; the Government has advertised many times in the past."

"Do you think the Government should use paid advertising in the newspapers and magazines in this educational campaign?"

DONE FOR LIBERTY LOANS

"Why not? Personally, I think such advertising would be most helpful. It was so in the case of the Liberty loans. It has been helpful in other cases. Why not apply it to law enforcement?"

"Would you advocate the use of the radio and public speakers?"

"Where effective, yes; they are details, however, that would have to be worked out by the proper Federal agencies."

"How much do you think the Government should spend in this educational campaign?"

"That would be for Mr. Hoover and his subordinates to decide. My own opinion is that enough should be spent to make the campaign effective—several million dollars a year anyhow."

"Five millions?"

"That would be very conservative."

"Ten millions?"

"I wouldn't want to say ten millions or any other flat sum. The program would have to be worked out in the light of conditions."

"What should the Government advertise?"

"Law enforcement; its advantages and benefits to the public."

FOR GENERAL ENFORCEMENT

"Prohibition law enforcement alone?"

"No; I would make the appeal wider. General law enforcement. That should appeal to everybody, and it includes prohibition enforcement."

"Where should the campaign be carried on?"

"Wherever needed; in the big wet centers, of course, and in territory that is moist but not dripping wet."

"New York? Chicago? Detroit?"

"Yes; in those cities and many other places. Boston, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, San Francisco, to mention a few places that come to mind immediately. Generally speaking, the campaign should be carried on wherever law enforcement is at a low ebb."

"And that means, mainly, the big cities. Prohibition enforcement has become largely a city problem, a big city problem. Take the first eight cities of the country; in their municipal areas and suburbs there are more people to-day than there are on all the farms in the country. Those big communities are the chief wet spots in the United States. We should concentrate on them and on smaller cities where prohibition enforcement is ineffective. The rural regions don't need it so much."

DISAPPOINTED BY HOUSE

Doctor McBride expressed disappointment at the failure of the House to appropriate the proposed $24,000,000 additional for prohibition enforcement during the coming fiscal year, but added that the result was not unexpected.

"The bill to make that appropriation," he said, "provided for the educational campaign we have just been discussing. Its need was recognized by Mr. Mellon, who referred to it in his letter to Senator WARREN.

"Regardless of the failure of the House to pass that particular item, the basis has been laid for speeding up the Federal end of prohibition in the near future. And, of course, the drys expect to press for more money in the future. Mr. Hoover ought to be given all the money he can use to advantage in enforcing the law. I don't believe anybody will take exception to that as a basic principle.

"It goes without saying that the appropriation of additional funds should be safeguarded and distributed among the various agencies. I have advocated that from the beginning. There never has been any conflict of opinion in dry ranks on that score, or, so far as I know, on the need of more funds for Federal enforcement. We are and have been a unit on that point.

FOR GREATER COORDINATION

"The Federal Government's share of prohibition enforcement, however, is only a part of the program. Just now, I believe, there is need for greater coordination among the Federal agencies engaged in enforcing the law and prosecuting violators. I believe that need will be met during the Hoover administration; we think Mr. Hoover will work it out.

"There is still greater need, however, for coordination between the Federal authorities on the one hand and the State and local authorities on the other. We believe Mr. Hoover and his subordinates will recognize that need and take effective steps to meet it. The proposed campaign of education would help; and doubtless other measures will be taken along that line during the Hoover administration."

"What measures, for instance?"

"Well, prohibition enforcement essentially is largely local. Local officials must be stimulated—encouraged, perhaps, is a better word—to enforce the law in their localities. Chicago furnishes a good illustration.

SMALL FORCE IN CHICAGO

"There are about 7,000 policemen in Chicago, but only 27 Federal prohibition agents. I understand that 1,700 of Chicago's 7,000 policemen are engaged in traffic requirements alone. There ought also to be a good-sized force engaged similarly in prohibition enforcement. The job oughtn't to be left wholly to the Federal Government.

"One of the things we expect to accomplish during the Hoover administration is a betterment of conditions such as that. I believe that problem will be approached from two angles.

"First, I believe the Federal Government, under Mr. Hoover, will do what it can to create a better understanding between Federal authorities and State and local authorities in the matter of prohibition enforcement, so that the State and local people will become more active in cleaning up their own houses.

WANT CHURCH MEMBERS

"And, next, we are planning to devote our own attention more to local conditions. We plan to stimulate church members to greater interest in public affairs. In 1924, for instance, only 40 to 50 per cent of the church members—adults, I mean—went to the polls in Chicago. Last year we determined to get out the vote. We assigned the task largely to volunteer workers, giving each worker, say, 10 names of church members to be notified by telephone on the days when they should register and vote.

"As a result, 97 per cent of the voters in one church went to the polls in 1928. The lowest percentage, I believe, was 81. That sort of work told in the primary and election. Our candidate for State's attorney was nominated by 200,000 plurality and elected by 160,000.

"During the Hoover administration we expect to follow those tactics in greater degree than ever before. We expect to get out the church vote—solidly, if possible—in every wet community. We have recently established our own research department, and it is now beginning to make available a considerable amount of educational material. We expect to use this more and more in local communities. The drive will be the most extensive, perhaps, ever made by the dry forces of the Nation."

INTENSE EFFORT PLANNED

"A greater drive than the drives for submission and ratification of the eighteenth amendment?"

"Fully as extensive wherever it is needed, and perhaps even more extensive in some communities. The dry organizations of the United States are on the eve of an intense effort to have prohibition enforced.

"We know prohibition can be enforced and we believe that sort of effort will result in its being enforced throughout the Nation. The work necessarily will be slower in some communities than in others, but eventually the law will be enforced throughout the entire country. We expect to see conditions vastly improved during the Hoover administration.

"Will you tell Mr. Hoover how you think the job ought to be done?"

HAVE FAITH IN HOOVER

"We believe in Mr. Hoover. We have full faith and confidence in his sincerity and ability. We think he will be able to uphold the Federal end of law enforcement effectively. And we will back him to the limit in his efforts.

"But, after all, the task is his, so far as Federal enforcement is concerned. We recognize that fully, and we do not intend to intrude upon or embarrass him. His is the responsibility; he should be given every opportunity to work out the problem himself. He can count on any help we can give him if he wants it. The drys will see to it that he gets a dry Congress every election and all the money that a dry Congress should appropriate for effective use in prohibition enforcement."

"Will the Anti-Saloon League attempt to tell President Hoover how to go about the job?"

"Certainly not. Mr. Hoover needs nobody to tell him that."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 8, 1929:

S. 4739. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain Government-owned land at Manchester, N. H.

On February 9, 1929:

S. 4036. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer the control of certain land in Oregon to the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 4338. An act to authorize the President to award, in the name of Congress, gold medals of appropriate design to John H. Towers, Albert C. Read, Elmer F. Stone, Walter Hinton, H. C. Rodd, J. L. Breese, and Eugene Rhodes;

S. 4787. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Savanna, Ill., and the city of Sabula, Iowa;

S. 4957. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Danville & Western Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate the existing railroad bridge across the Dan River in Pittsylvania County, Va.; and

S. 5110. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

On February 11, 1929:

S. 4818. An act for the relief of hay growers in Brazoria, Galveston, and Harris Counties, Tex.

FORESTRY AND FLOOD CONTROL IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith for the information of the Congress communications from the Secretary of Agriculture dated June 4, 1928, and February 9, 1929, submitting reports with reference to the relation of forestry to the control of floods in the Mississippi Valley. These reports have been prepared in compliance with the provision contained in section 10 of the act of Congress approved May 15, 1928, for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1929.

(NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.)

SPECULATIVE ACTIVITIES—FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk my resolution as modified. When previously submitted it contained a provision asking the Federal Reserve Board its reason for increasing rediscount rate. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who objected to the resolution on Saturday, came over and talked to me about it, and stated that if I struck out that part of the resolution and framed it as now modified, he would have no objection to it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution as modified by the Senator from Alabama be stated with the corrections or changes that have been made in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. As modified, the resolution reads as follows:

Whereas in press dispatches recently the Federal Reserve Board has complained that money is being drawn from the channels of business and used for speculative purposes, and that some of said speculation is illegitimate and harmful: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to give to the Senate any information and suggestions that it feels would be helpful in securing legislation necessary to correct the evil complained of and prevent illegitimate and harmful speculation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Alabama what is his idea in asking for the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. HEFLIN. The press has had a good deal to say recently about wild speculation in the exchanges in New York, and the Federal Reserve Board issued a statement that something would have to be done to prevent money being drawn out of the channels of legitimate business to carry on such speculation.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think that was a wise act?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. DILL. I hope the Senator is not proposing this with a view to preventing the board from stopping speculation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all. I am asking the board if it wants to make any suggestion to us as to what legislation would be advisable to prevent such speculation in the future.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, has my resolution been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will come up in its regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was asking unanimous consent to have the resolution acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—which I do not mean to do—I desire to say a few words. I think gambling on the exchanges should be prohibited. I would, however, be very loath to see lodged in a bureau of this Government, whether the Federal Reserve Board or any other bureau, the right to say when speculation should be considered legitimate and when illegitimate. If that power be given to the Federal Reserve Board or to any other instrumentality of government, it will hold the credit of this country in the hollow of its hand. Everybody who does business will do it subject to their consent. It would make possible at any time a combination to destroy the entire credit of the country.

I think the law ought to provide what may and what may not be done, and then the enforcement of that law will, of itself, check the evil complained of. I should very much dislike to see a license given to gambling, but to provide that whenever gambling does not please a certain board, whether it be the Federal Reserve Board or any other Government instrumentality, it may stop it, would be bestowing a dangerous power. Whether it were used for a sinister purpose or not, people in the market who were destroyed by the order would always believe the action was taken at the request of a combination of people who were on the other side of the market. Indeed, the opportunity for abuse would be so great that such power ought not to be lodged in anybody's hands.

Hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, in fact, billions of dollars, would rest upon the permission or the refusal of permission of such a body to proceed with a market that it might decide was speculative. I say the law should fix what is and what is not legitimate speculation, and not lodge the control in any board and give it the right to say, "This is legitimate and that is not legitimate," because no living man would know when such a body was going to say speculation was legitimate and when it was illegitimate, and therefore, there could be no security in any business. I hope there is no intention of trying to lodge such authority by future legislation aimed at by this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to speak on the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to occupy the time of the Senate at length in reference to this resolution; neither do I intend to oppose it; but I do desire to call attention to some matters in connection with this subject, in view of the fact that nearly a year ago the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency reported a resolution which had been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Very interesting hearings were held by the committee on the resolution, and if the Members of the Senate have not read those hearings it would be enlightening to study them, because some very able financial experts in this country testified on the subject of what Congress could and could not do with respect to the regulation of the use of credit for speculative purposes on stock markets. In the 12 months which have elapsed since the introduction of that resolution and the almost 12 months since its report to the Senate, so far as I am aware there has been no effort to secure its consideration. It was on the calendar for a considerable portion of the last session of Congress—since last May—and it has been on the calendar all during the present session. That resolution, among other things, requested the Federal Reserve Board to issue some character of warning or take some steps that would curb the use of the credit of this country in speculative finance.

The Governor of the Federal Reserve Board testified before the committee, and very well-known financial experts of colleges and universities and of the Federal reserve banks testified. So we can not say that the Senate has done anything more to bring about any possible correction of any evil that may exist in speculative financing than to have one of its committees report a resolution and put it on the calendar, and then take no further steps. Because the Federal Reserve Board has done precisely what the La Follette resolution asked it to do, to wit, has issued a warning or a public statement which has had a very decided effect, at least temporarily, on the prices of stocks on the stock exchange. After the horse has been stolen, we rush in here to lock the door.

It may be entirely proper for us to ask the Federal Reserve Board for any information it may possess or for any suggestion that it may desire to make with reference to amendment of the Federal reserve act with respect to speculative financing, although I have an idea that it will be as difficult for Congress, and probably more damaging for Congress, to undertake to define the limitations and say that a certain thing is and another thing is not the speculative use of finance and credit as it was for Congress in the case of the Kellogg-Briand treaty to define self-defense and in the naval cruiser bill to define freedom of the seas. I doubt very seriously whether anything more harmful could occur to the financial structure of this Nation than for Congress to undertake to step in every time it thinks that there has been too much or too little speculative financing carried on in the country and try to regulate it by some strait-jacket restriction in the form of legislative enactment.

Presumably we have a competent Federal Reserve Board. We all know that the Federal reserve system has functioned very largely to the satisfaction of our country in stabilizing the financial condition and the credit of our Nation and distributing that credit broadcast all over the country, without concentrating it at any particular point. As a general rule, we are satisfied with the operation of the Federal reserve system, and I am willing to assume, until the contrary appears without serious controversy, that we have a competent Federal Reserve Board that is all the time functioning and has its hands upon the pulse of the financial situation of the country. I assume——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a moment. I assume that last week when the Federal Reserve Board issued its more or less sensational statement with reference to the credit conditions of the country it was justified in so doing, but in doing that it did exactly what the La Follette resolution asked it to do a year ago. Now that it has done it of its own volition, I doubt the wisdom of any action being taken here by the Senate or by the House or by Congress as a whole that would create the impression that we regard that action or that warning of the Federal Reserve Board as having been prompted by some evil purpose or intent.

The newspapers have been filled with the suggestion that the Federal Reserve Board conferred with a distinguished English financier before the warning or the statement was issued, and the inference was drawn that some sinister motive was thereby involved, although in issuing its statement the Federal Reserve Board did nothing more than its duty in warning against any pyramiding of credit.

I doubt seriously whether we can benefit the condition which exists. I do not object to this resolution, and if the Federal Reserve Board has any suggestion as to the wise amendment of the law that would in any way assist it in keeping the credit situation within bounds and always adjustable to the real needs of the country, I would be very much in favor of such legislation; but I do doubt the wisdom of half-baked statements or half-baked efforts on the part of Congress to handle a situation which I think the Federal Reserve Board itself is amply qualified to handle.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. It has repeatedly been said—and the Senator repeated the statement a few minutes ago—that the Federal Reserve Board has stabilized business in the United States. I want to ask the Senator if he considers that it has stabilized agriculture?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not say that the Federal Reserve Board had stabilized business. I said that it had been largely influential in stabilizing credit in the country as a whole. I do not think that agriculture has been stabilized. I am not prepared to say, however, that the Federal Reserve Board has not gone as far as it had the right to go under the law in an effort to do that.

Mr. BROOKHART. It went as far as it had the right to go to deflate agriculture, did it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to go into that. The Senator has reference to things that occurred some 10 years ago, which were the subject of very great controversy, and I do not desire to enter into them at this time.

Mr. BROOKHART. It started that deflation 10 years ago, and the process has not been ended up to this date; in fact, it is still emphatically going on right now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt whether it can be successfully contended that the Federal Reserve Board has taken any official action which has denied to agriculture any credit that it was able to obtain with the security that it was possible to accept under the Federal reserve law.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator is aware that credit control affects everything.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. BROOKHART. And the discrimination in favor of speculation would be against agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be against agriculture, provided any money were taken from agricultural activities which it otherwise would have obtained. The testimony before the Banking and Currency Committee on the part of the officers of the Federal Reserve Board and the testimony of Professor Sprague, I believe, who is the financial expert at Harvard or Yale, indicated very clearly to my mind that there had been no credit withdrawn from agricultural communities by reason of the conditions which at that time existed. Whether that is true now a year later, I am not able to say, but at the time we held our hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee I was pretty well convinced that, so far as any actual money being withdrawn from either legitimate business or agricultural pursuits was concerned, it had not been done by reason of the conditions that were portrayed at that time.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it was worse than anything of that kind, because it so unsettled agricultural values that they are no longer good security for loans, and the damage has been much greater than the mere denying of loans to agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I did not rise to object to this resolution. If, as I said, the Federal Reserve Board can furnish the Senate any information upon which valuable information can be had, we ought to welcome it; but I did desire to express my doubt of the wisdom of any ill-considered action on our part which might have a bad effect upon the credit of the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before the resolution is passed I should like to submit an inquiry to the author of the resolution: What good is hoped for in the event of the passage of the resolution?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will read the "whereases" of the resolution:

> Whereas, in press dispatches recently, the Federaly Reserve Board has complained that money is being drawn from the channels of business and used for speculative purposes, and that some of said speculation is illegitimate and harmful; and
> Whereas said Federal Reserve Board, in its efforts to correct what it regards as an evil in this matter, has increased the rediscount rate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to give to the Senate any information and suggestions that it feels would be helpful in securing legislation necessary to correct the evil complained of and prevent illegitimate and harmful speculation.

That is all it does. It simply calls on the board to give to the Senate any information that it feels would be helpful in the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it occurs to me that this resolution will fall far short of obtaining satisfactory results. It simply asks the Federal Reserve Board to advise the Congress, with such recommendations as the board may see fit and proper to make, in order that legislation may be proposed by the Congress and considered and probably enacted.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator what harm could come from that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It occurs to me that this inquiry should go much further. If the Federal Reserve Board has any observations or suggestions or recommendations to make it is the duty of such board to present such recommendations; and, so far as I know, while I am not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, no such recommendations have been made.

It appears from the newspaper comments that some $5,000,000,000 have been withdrawn from productive purposes and used for speculative purposes. At the same time, it appears from the newspaper comments that some $14,000,000,000 have been loaned by American financiers abroad. It occurs to me that if it is bad policy to permit our banking institutions to loan $5,000,000,000 here at home for speculative purposes, it is many times worse to permit $14,000,000,000 of our money and credit to be loaned to and in foreign countries. It occurs to me that proper results can not be reached by the resolution proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is hardly correct, I think, to state that the banks in this country have loaned $5,000,000,000 at home for speculative purposes. Without in any way commenting upon the propriety of such loans, I think the Senator will find that almost half of the $5,000,000,000 referred to comprises loans made by others than banks, including corporations and private individuals. So it is not quite a correct statement to say that the Federal reserve bank has made loans to the amount of $5,000,000,000 for speculative purposes.

If this amount has been loaned, it is difficult to say what is purely speculative and what is not. If a man goes into a bank with a perfectly good security and asks to borrow ten or twenty thousand dollars upon it, I doubt whether the Federal reserve system has the right to say to that bank that they must inquire what the man is going to do with the money before they allow him to borrow it. At any rate, however, a large portion of this $5,000,000,000 represents money owned by corporations and individuals which have loaned it for this purpose, and it is not chargeable to the banks themselves. Whether or not it is proper for them to do that is a question upon which I do not undertake to pass.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Is it not likewise true, supplementing the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, that, rightly or wrongly, as long as call money is averaging from 6 to 9 or 10 per cent, individuals all over the country who happen to have money will take advantage of such a high rate of interest and try to make it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, under present procedure the banks can borrow money from the Federal reserve system and, after paying interest, can reloan that money on call and make a substantial profit.

If it is true that $5,000,000,000 are now being loaned for speculative purposes, that is more money than there is in circulation. I have before me a statement from the Treasury Department of date December 31, 1928, showing the total amount of money in circulation at that time to be $4,973,168,182. Of that amount approximately $500,000,000 are in circulation in foreign countries, which reduces the actual amount of money—paper, gold, and silver—in circulation in America to less than four and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that not enough importance and attention are given to financial matters by the Congress. We often say that the Supreme Court is the most important tribunal that we have. I venture the assertion that the Supreme Court is not the most important tribunal that we have; that there is one tribunal of far more importance to the people of this country than the Supreme Court, and that tribunal is the Federal Reserve Board. This board has the power to put its hands in the pockets of every citizen of this Republic. This board has the power to feed money into circulation, to make money plentiful, and thereby to make money cheap, the inevitable result being a general raising of prices. Likewise, the board has the power to take money from circulation, to make money scarce, and thereby to make money dear, the result being a general depression in prices. Either action affects the laboring man and the salaried man; in brief, such action affects every man in the Nation, and yet at this moment I doubt if one-tenth of 1 per cent of the people could name a single member of the Federal Reserve Board. I doubt if one ten-thousandth of 1 per cent of our citizenship could name all the members of this board, which in my judgment is the most important board in our Government.

I wish to call attention also to the fact that at the present time our financial structure is undergoing a radical change. In former years, when companies and institutions desired to finance an enterprise, bonds were issued and sold and funds thus raised were used to finance such enterprise. To-day companies are not floating bonds; they are issuing stocks.

To-day we see companies with bonded indebtedness and with preferred stocks retiring such preferred stocks and retiring such bonds by the issuance of common stock without par value. This new development or policy has very greatly increased the amount of common stocks now before the investing public. The people were educated in securities during the World War. More people are interested in securities to-day than formerly, and, of course, they should be protected.

I have no objection to the passage of this resolution, but it occurs to me that it would be much better to direct the attention of the committees of the Congress to this subject matter, to the end that the committees may have hearings and bring back to the Congress recommendations in the form of proposed legislation.

The Federal Reserve Board consists of seven members, five of them appointed by the President. The members, as measured by banking standards, draw only small salaries. However, I am not criticizing the membership of the board. The members of the board get $12,000 a year. Membership on the Federal Reserve Board to-day is only a stepping-stone to some other position. When persons have acquired membership on this board and thereafter secure an opportunity to enter some banking institution, trust institution, or brokerage house, with an enlarged salary, they appear to be only too glad to step out of their positions on the Federal Reserve Board and accept private employment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator is aware of the fact that the law prohibits any member of the Federal Reserve Board from accepting a position in a bank until two years after his retirement from the board?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that within the last few days a member of that board, the Comptroller of the Currency, resigned; and, if press reports are true, the former comptroller is now a member of a brokerage firm in New York City.

It occurs to me, Mr. President, that membership on the Federal Reserve Board should be the culmination rather than a stepping-stone to a financial career. I am of the opinion that the salary of the members of the Federal Reserve Board should be increased and their tenure of office lengthened, to the end that the best financiers of America may be interested in ending their financial careers as members of the Federal Reserve Board, instead of making such service a stepping-stone to private employment. It occurs to me that this subject matter is one worthy of the consideration of the regular standing committee, to the end that the acts complained of may be given more than passing notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Alabama for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Alabama if he has altered his resolution in accordance with the suggestion that I made to him on Saturday?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senate that the Senator from Virginia and I had a conference Saturday on this subject, and that I had stricken out the part that referred to the rediscount rate. A rather interesting thing occurred in that connection. When the Senator from Virginia came over to see me, I suggested to him that I had already marked that out; and he said, "Well, I will show you that I have done the same thing." He brought his copy of the resolution over here, and we had both marked it exactly alike. That has been stricken out.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I shall make no objection whatsoever to the consideration and passage of the resolution as altered, nor do I imagine any member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate will offer any objection. Those of us who have conferred about it concur in the opinion that the resolution can do no harm. I venture to doubt whether it will do a great deal of good, for the reason that the Federal Reserve Board is not charged by law with the supervision of stock-exchange activities, except as speculative activities may relate themselves to the facilities of the Federal reserve banks.

These processes in the money centers have gotten far beyond that. As has been suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, the great corporations of the country have acquired the habit of throwing their surplus funds into the vortex of stock speculation, instead of distributing them among their stockholders in the nature of dividends, and individuals are doing the same thing. Member banks of the system have manipulated their deposit accounts so as to transfer from the demand deposit account, requiring a reserve of 7 per cent, to the time deposit account, requiring a reserve of only 3 per cent, transferring from one to the other, and thereby releasing enormous funds of the banks to be thrown into the maelstrom of stock speculation.

To show how utterly unwilling some banks are to desist from this practice, when I presented a bill here last week to restore the reserve behind time deposits to the figure which obtained in the original set-up of the Federal reserve system, banks all over the country began to write me letters of protest. That alone would withhold from these speculative activities at least $300,000,000; but some of the banks are not willing to desist.

Speaking of the expense accounts of the Federal reserve system referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senate will understand that the Government of the United States does not defray one dollar of the expenses of the Federal reserve system, and it never has. Yet, much to my astonishment, I found in the Budget statement transmitted to Congress last December by the President of the United States an item of $2,700,000 for the administration of the Federal reserve banking system. How on earth the Director of the Budget, who is assumed to be an experienced financier, could have reported to the President an item of that description is beyond my comprehension, because the Federal Treasury is not taxed to the extent of one dollar for the expense accounts of the Federal reserve system. The entire expense of the system is borne by the member banks, assessed against the member banks by the Federal Reserve Board. Yet here we find in the Budget an item of $2,700,000 for the administration of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. CARAWAY. What became of that item?

Mr. GLASS. I do not know. I suppose it was to impress Congress with the fact that the Government is engaged in enormous expenditures, and that economy was very essential.

Mr. CARAWAY. And they struck it out?

Mr. GLASS. It has not been stricken out. It was in the estimates of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CARAWAY. When it goes out it will be pointed to as showing how much they have saved, I assume.

Mr. GLASS. I will not undertake to say as to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not appear in any of the appropriation bills before any subcommittee of which the Senator from Virginia is a member?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no. It was just in the Budget estimate transmitted to the Congress by the President; and how the Director of the Budget could have made any such mistake is beyond my comprehension. Of course, the President is not to be censured for transmitting it. He is not expected to know such details; but the Director of the Budget ought to have known. That is merely incidental, however.

I want to add that I shall make no objection to the Senator's resolution, though I am satisfied it will accomplish no good, if no harm.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does not the statement made by the Senator with respect to the—shall I say imperfections—of the operations of the Federal reserve system, or the banks, lead to the conclusion that there ought to be legislation?

Mr. GLASS. I think there ought to be legislation. I have introduced several bills which merely touch the abuses of which we are now complaining.

Mr. President, unless some man be wise enough, have wit enough, to give a statutory definition of investments as contradistinguished from stock gambling, I do not see how we are to curb these gambling activities. That ought to be done.

If one invests $10,000, for example, in General Motors, with a view of investment, with a view of deriving therefrom the dividends a prosperous company is supposed to pay annually, that is an investment; but if one buys $10,000 of General Motors, or of any other stock, this hour with a view to selling the same stock even before delivery physically can be made, the next hour, or with a view to anticipating the future of to-morrow or the next day thereafter, that is nothing in the world but pure gambling, just as much gambling as if Senators were to sit at a roulette table and bet on the outcome of the game.

I have often pointed to the absurdity of States and communities and the Nation enacting laws making it a criminal offense for a company of gentlemen to sit around a table and wager at poker, or to go to a race track and bet on a race, and then legalizing a system of pure gambling that menaces the entire commercial and financial fabric of the Nation. It is an absurdity, and there ought to be some statutory definition made of investment as contradistinguished from pure gambling, and laws should be enacted to put stock gamblers out of business. There is not a thing in the world constructive in their operations. It is a matching of gambling wit against gambling wit. They do not produce a thing on earth that contributes either to the happiness of mankind or to the prosperity of legitimate business.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, does not the Senator put the old-fashioned game of poker in rather a preferred class in comparison with the operations on the stock exchange in the illustration he has just given?

Mr. GLASS. I may say to the Senator that I do not know anything about poker and I do not know anything about stock gambling. I keep out of both operations.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, at least it could be said for poker that people bet their own money.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. But in stock transactions they are gambling in other people's wealth.

Mr. GLASS. They sell things they do not possess, and they buy things they never expect to get.

Mr. CARAWAY. And break people who are not concerned in their gambling.

Mr. GLASS. And thereby disturb the whole commercial fabric of this country, and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offered a bill several years ago, and I think I offered a similar bill at this session, which would prohibit banks connected with the Federal reserve system from loaning to stock brokers or to persons who were buying on a margin for speculative purposes, requiring an investigation preceding a loan to ascertain whether the money was to be used in a marginal transaction or in a valid purchase. I made an investigation at that time and discovered that more than 85 per cent of all the transactions upon the New York Stock Exchange were marginal transactions, and that more than 80 per cent of the marginal purchasers were wiped out, so that the banking system was used in the promotion of marginal transactions for the purpose of wiping out the hundreds and thousands of investors in the United States who bought on margin. The bill which I offered interdicted that and made some investigation necessary precedent to such a loan.

I suggested to some of the Senators at that time—and I have suggested since—that it might be a good idea to adopt the English system, letting the Federal reserve system fix a minimum rate of interest, and then have discretion to increase the rate of interest where there were any speculative activities, so as to interfere as much as they possibly could with these speculative transactions.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say that no law is required to enable the Federal Reserve Board to preserve its facilities from that sort of transaction. It may do it under existing law. I have pounded and pounded the board for three years to have them do it. They may do it, and, conscious of the fact, and only because conscious of the fact, they issued their declaration of three days ago, doing just exactly what would have been expressed as the sense of the Senate as to what ought to have been done if the La Follette resolution had been adopted last May. Yet every time that resolution was reached upon the calendar it encountered an objection here. We would hear several say "Over," and the resolution did go over. In this belated way, a year after the resolution was favorably reported from the Banking and Currency Committee, the Federal Reserve Board does precisely what that resolution would have asked them to do, but they have done it too late. If the board had shown the vision and the firmness and the courage that it ought to have had and ought to have exercised, we would never have gone to this startling peak of $6,000,000,000 of loans to stockbrokers.

I may say in a word, in conclusion, that the great difficulty which arises in the situation which besets the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses is the fact that we have a dual system of banking. We have a national bank system and a State bank system, and regulations by the board or statutory requirements by Congress of a severe nature would drive the national banks, which are compelled to be members of the Federal reserve system, into the State banking systems. So that it has been exceedingly difficult to make these regulations, or to pass these laws, and make them effective, without in the last analysis, if not destroying, seriously crippling, the system itself.

That has largely been the trouble; but, as I have said, the Federal reserve banking system is not charged by law with the supervision of stock-speculating activities, and I imagine that the board will say, in response to this resolution, that it has no lawful authority except to protect the facilities and assets of the Federal reserve system from encroachment for these purposes. It can not control the stock market.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to allow me to ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to have another resolution brought up immediately, on the same subject, the La Follette resolution.

Mr. SACKETT. I just want to ask the Senator from Virginia a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. The matter has consumed a good deal of time. But I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SACKETT. I wanted to ask the Senator the very question that he raised a moment ago, as to the difficulty between the dual systems of banking. Would not the difficulty be increased if the Federal Reserve Board would not allow either series of banks to take advantage of the high rates of money that are now being offered for stock-exchange loans?

Mr. GLASS. If the Federal Reserve Board were to exercise in what might be regarded a harsh way or arbitrary way the power with which it is vested under the law, it might drive many member banks out of the system.

The Federal Reserve Board has access to the books of every member bank. It knows or ought to know—yes; I say it does know—which of its member banks are loaning money on call for stock-speculative purposes.

Mr. SACKETT. If they were prevented from getting 8 or 9 per cent, many of them would go under the State banking laws, would they not?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; they would go out of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to take a few moments——

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the Senator will wait a moment. I am going to ask to take up another resolution in a moment.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to make a few comments on the question raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that this is all being done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Iowa insists upon it, of course, I will yield, but his remarks will call for a reply.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; not necessarily.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, to-day is Calendar Monday, and quite a number of Senators are anxious to have the calendar called under Rule VIII. As I understand, debate in this hour, after 1 o'clock, is limited to five minutes. I have not raised the question before because the debate has been very interesting, and valuable information has been given the Senate, and every one seemed to be willing that it should continue. I hope that the resolution will be disposed of promptly so that we may go ahead with the calendar under Rule VIII after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think the remarks of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are very appropriate to the resolution and largely describe the situation, but I want to call attention to another fact. The Federal reserve law itself outlawed speculative loans for rediscount purposes and it affirmatively prohibits the Federal reserve bank from rediscounting speculative loans. That is the law now. So far as I know the banks have lived up to that law, and speculative loans, even as defined by the Senator from Virginia, are not rediscounted. I think that is true. I think it is not charged that the board is violating the law.

It seems to me that the same reason exists for prohibiting the member banks from making speculative loans that existed for prohibiting the reserve banks from rediscounting speculative loans. No one has ever suggested to me a reason why those loans should be outlawed for rediscount purposes in the big overhead banks, the most responsible of all the banks, and then permitted in the member banks, except possibly it be the indirect suggestion of the Senator from Virginia that it would drive the business into the State banks.

But, Mr. President, we have authority to control those State banks. We can stop gambling through the United States mails and through telegraphy, and we can stop gambling in interstate commerce. We have ample authority to bring the State banks under exactly the same rule as the national banks. I introduced a bill, and have had it pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency for more than a year, to prohibit member banks from making such loans. We can prohibit corporations from making these gambling loans in interstate commerce likewise.

The making of these loans constitutes the greatest menace of the times. It is now gathering up the surplus credit of the country, taking it away from legitimate business, and, not only that, but it is destroying the values of legitimate securities and weakening agriculture until agricultural values are no longer a basis for credit even in their own banks, and it has been done directly and indirectly through the gambling activities that ought to be prohibited by the Federal reserve law and the general banking laws.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, may I have my resolution acted upon now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas in press dispatches recently the Federal Reserve Board has complained that money is being drawn from the channels of business and used for speculative purposes, and that some of said speculation is illegitimate and harmful: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to give to the Senate any information and suggestions that it feels would be helpful in securing legislation necessary to correct the evil complained of and prevent illegitimate and harmful speculation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President, I will ask that the other resolution——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will not the Senator permit me to call up the La Follette resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. Let us get through with morning business first. I ask for the regular order.

INVESTIGATION OF SALT CREEK OIL LEASES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 320) by Mr. WALSH of Montana for the adoption of the report of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys on the investigations conducted under Senate Resolution 202, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate approves and adopts the minority report herewith, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, of the investigation into the renewal of the contract executed in the year 1922 by Albert B. Fall, Secretary of the Interior, and the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co., for the sale of the royalty oil accruing to the United States from the leases of lands within the Salt Creek district in the State of Wyoming, and into the cancellation of such renewal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] is interested in the resolution. He was obliged to leave the city for a few days. He preferred a request that the resolution go over until Friday, when he can be here. I was extremely desirous of having the attention of the Senate at the earliest possible day, but I feel obliged to accede to this request upon the understanding that it would go over until Friday without prejudice. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go until Friday without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution coming over from the previous day, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 322) by Mr. JONES to amend Rule XXXVIII of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has offered a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice until the Senator from Arkansas returns, which, I am informed, will be to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I shall hope to get the resolution up and considered in the next morning hour. I am perfectly willing to have it go over now without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over without prejudice.

Mr. GEORGE. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate Resolution 322, presented by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I ask that the proposed substitute may lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GEORGE's substitute amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Nominations shall be considered in open executive session unless the Senate, in open executive session, shall by a majority vote determine that any particular nomination shall be considered in closed executive session. When nominations are considered in closed executive session all motions and all votes taken thereon shall nevertheless be published in the RECORD, but information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting on nominations in closed executive session concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated shall be kept secret: Provided, however, That the committee may advise any nominee of the nature and character of charges made against him, but the name of the person or persons making such charges shall not be disclosed.

WALL STREET GAMBLING

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has called attention to a very important matter, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has touched on some things of importance in connection with illegitimate speculation. I had in mind when I offered the resolution the desire to obtain the Federal Reserve Board's opinion as to what kind of speculation it regarded as illegitimate and harmful——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. Does the Senator from Alabama ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will move to take up a bill and then speak on that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would be out of order at this time.

Mr. HEFLIN. If I can make a motion to take up the bill, I could speak on that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order on Monday under Rule VIII.

Mr. CURTIS. That can only be waived by unanimous consent on Monday.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will only consume six or seven minutes to say what I wish to say, and I ask unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, does the Senator really mean six or seven minutes?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think it will take more than that length of time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am not trying to prevent the owners of real shares of stocks and bonds from selling them. That is legitimate business. But I am opposed to the sale in unlimited quantities of imaginary shares, fictitious values, and watered stocks. When that stuff is put upon the market to induce the citizen to buy it, the promoters or stock-market gamblers are practicing fraud and deception upon him and obtaining his money under false pretenses, and Congress owes it to itself and to good citizens everywhere to put an end to it.

The same unfortunate and deplorable situation exists regarding cotton. When the crop of actual cotton is about 14,000,000 bales, the speculators in 12 months' time buy and sell on the cotton exchanges 200,000,000 bales of a fictitious stuff called cotton. And these transactions are used to beat down the price of actual cotton. So there is a kind of speculation in cotton that is legitimate and a kind that is illegitimate and hurtful to the producers. It is incumbent upon us to put a stop to the kind that is illegitimate and harmful. In all deals involving shares, stocks, bonds, and cotton there should be actual shares, stocks, bonds, and cotton back of every contract bought and sold on the exchange.

Mr. President, Wall Street has become the most notorious gambling center in the universe. It is the hotbed and breeding place of the worst form of gambling that ever cursed the country. No predatory monarch with his plundering army ever exacted such toll from his victims as the gambling monster of Wall Street takes from the American people every year. The Louisiana State lottery slew its hundreds, but the New York State gambling exchanges slay their hundreds of thousands. They not only draw millions of money out of productive enterprises and other channels of legitimate business to be fed into the gambling devices of New York, but they are causing State and Federal employees, clerks in stores, and bank cashiers and men of moderate means in every walk of life to send in their meager earnings to be swallowed up by a Wall Street gambling monster that has grown fat on the losses of these and other unfortunate victims.

But that is not all, Mr. President. Besides the taking away of money needed to meet the business requirements of communities in every State, this gambling monster is gathering in the last vestige of personal effects, household goods, and the house itself. He is destroying good citizens and breaking up once happy American homes. He has lured into his diabolical and deceptive haunts men of promise and of good repute, and he has blackened their characters, robbed them of their substance, and left them dazed and crazed without a cent in the world. He has made paupers out of men once prosperous and happy, and he has sent hundreds of his victims to insane asylums and hundreds more down to death by their own hands.

Money is being drained out of every community in the country to satisfy the insatiate demands of this New York gambling monster. The farmer can not obtain a loan satisfactory in length of time and interest rate to enable him to hold his produce off the market until spot prices will yield him a profit. So the farmer and his family must suffer. The merchant and manufacturer are told that the situation created by speculation—another name for gambling—is such that they can get a higher rate of interest for money there, and therefore the money must go there. As a result of this deplorable and damnable condition millions of patriotic Americans are denied the money at a reasonable rate of interest necessary to carry on their legitimate business.

This monstrous gambling system is making legitimate business in the United States a secondary matter, injuring and crippling it every day. It is denying to local exterprise and industry throughout the country the money needed to carry on productive and other necessary enterprises. It is gambling in an "imaginary" or "fictitious" stuff called cotton to beat down the price of real cotton, and robbing the cotton farmers of millions of dollars every year. It is helping to make farm life unpleasant and unprofitable. It is spreading the gloom of despondency and poverty amongst hundreds of thousands of farmers and producing in America a form of agricultural slavery. Those things, Mr. President, are not only wrong, they are inexcusable and indefensible. The Government owes it to itself and to its people to put an end to this monstrous evil.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The clerk will report the first business on the calendar.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the change of business before the Senate and the absence of many Senators, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Simmons
Barkley	Fess	King	Smith
Bayard	Fletcher	McKellar	Smoot
Bingham	Frazier	McMaster	Steck
Black	George	McNary	Steiwer
Blaine	Gerry	Mayfield	Stephens
Blease	Gillett	Neely	Swanson
Borah	Glass	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glenn	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Goff	Oddie	Tydings
Broussard	Gould	Overman	Tyson
Bruce	Greene	Phipps	Vandenberg
Burton	Hale	Pine	Wagner
Capper	Harris	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Harrison	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Hastings	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Couzens	Hawes	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Curtis	Hayden	Sackett	Watson
Dale	Heflin	Schall	Wheeler
Deneen	Johnson	Sheppard
Dill	Jones	Shipstead
Edge	Kendrick	Shortridge

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN COTTONSEED OIL

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Is that the bill reported favorably by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it is.

Mr. McNARY. At one time and early in the session the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] expressed a desire to be present when the bill should come up.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that he need not have any fear about the Senator from New York not being present when the bill is called. He will always be here.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is here and would like to have the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2864) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following: Wheat-mill, rye-mill, and corn-mill products, namely, flours, semolina, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY rose.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has asked that that bill be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I was going to express the same thought as has the Senator from Washington and ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being the unfinished business, that bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) requesting the President to immediately withdraw the armed forces of the United States from Nicaragua was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, what became of Order of Business 325, being the bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went over.

Mr. BLEASE. Very well.

The bill (S. 2679) to limit the period for which an officer appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate may hold over after his term shall have expired was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1263) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 173) expressing it as the sense of the Senate that Andrew W. Mellon should resign as Secretary of the Treasury was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1748) relating to the qualifications of jurors in the Federal courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3151) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1729) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. I move that that bill be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRUCE. Now I come to think of it, as we have such little time left, I will withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 742) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. I think that bill can not be disposed of in the time we have left, so I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1995) placing certain employees of the Bureau of Prohibition in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HELEN F. GRIFFIN

The bill (S. 1215) for the relief of Helen F. Griffin was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have obtained some very convincing testimony with respect to the validity and merit of that bill, and I desire to present it to the committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MUNICIPAL WATERSHEDS IN NATIONAL FORESTS

The bill (S. 2097) to provide for the protection of municipal watersheds within the national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I offer to the bill the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, to be known as section 4, and to read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no action shall be taken under the provisions of this act except pursuant to the request of an interested municipality and after a public hearing conducted within the county where all or a part of the area sought to be withdrawn or affected is situated by a representative of the Secretary of Agriculture designated for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not like to object to this bill; yet it will take some discussion should it be considered at this time. I have a number of amendments which I desire to offer to the bill. I am utterly unwilling to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the great discretion that is conferred upon him in this bill. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator object to the adoption of the amendment which I have proposed?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment protects the communities which may be interested in this bill. It is a measure of extreme importance to a great many communities in the West which are dependent for their community water on the streams that rise in the national forests. If we shall not pass some such bill as this, we will have to pass a series of individual bills. This is a blanket bill, and with the saving amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, I think all interests are protected in a general way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Utah whether he objects to the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. KING. I do not object to the consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of offering the amendment.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to make an objection to this bill because I know how important it is. I also know the value of having the watersheds protected. I have secured the passage of a number of bills with respect to this matter in my State, and there is never any objection to securing appropriate legislation in such cases. I will ask at this time that the bill go over; I will confer with the Senator from New Mexico, and I will be glad to join with him in having the bill taken up at the next morning hour.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before that bill goes over, I observe that the property in question is located in the national forests. It seems, if the record is correct, that the report has been made by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, when the jurisdiction is limited entirely to the public domain. I am curious to know if the bill has been referred to the committee have jurisdiction of the subject matter, namely, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Does the Senator know about that?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I am unable to give the Senator the information. I do recall that the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and a subcommittee was appointed to consider it. The subcommittee gave the bill thorough consideration and then the full committee did likewise; but I am unable to say how it occurred that the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys instead of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. The bill is going over as I understand, and I can examine it meanwhile.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3458) to create the reserve division of the War Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE and other Senators. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1625) to fix the salaries of the members of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1945) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS and other Senators. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ASSISTANCE OF LATIN-AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN HIGHWAY MATTERS

The bill (S. 1718) to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the governments of the Latin-American Republics in highway matters was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. ODDIE. I should like very much to see this bill go through. There is a strong demand for its passage from all the automobile and good-road organizations in the country, and from those who want to see a better feeling exist between the various countries of the Americas, which the passage of this legislation will create.

This bill has the approval of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Public Roads. It is a very necessary piece of legislation. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I persist in my objection.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me a moment? I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Nevada. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment limiting the time for which an employee of the Bureau of Roads might be detailed to this work in South American countries to a period not to exceed, say, one year?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes, Mr. President. I so stated the last time this bill was brought before the Senate. I will agree to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over under the objection of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the first opportunity I shall bring up this bill and move that it be passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1294) to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. McNARY. I was going to make that request on account of the absence of the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1762) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS

The bill (H. R. 391) to regulate the use of the Capitol Building and Grounds was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let that go over.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a short time ago I offered an amendment to this bill, and I desire to perfect that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made to the consideration of the bill and it will be passed over.

Mr. BLAINE. I simply ask leave to perfect the amendment, and then will ask that the bill go over, if there is no objection.

On page 2 of the amendment, line 9, strike out the words "Treasury Building" and insert the word "Capitol."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin and the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2475) to create a prosperity reserve and to stabilize industry and employment by the expansion of public works during periods of unemployment and industrial depression was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION REGARDING AGRICULTURE

The bill (H. R. 11074) to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah bear with me for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Many moments.

Mr. McNARY. This bill has passed the House. It has been on the Senate Calendar for some time. The Department of Agriculture thinks it is very important legislation. Indeed, the Secretary thinks it is intimately associated with farm relief. I think practically all of the farm organizations of the country have indorsed the measure, and have seen me repeatedly and urged action, so far as I could influence action, as chairman of the committee.

The bill simply places the Department of Agriculture in a position to be a better fact-gathering agency in foreign countries than it is now, to give data to farmers that will be useful in the distribution of their crops. It will collect and distribute information that will be helpful to them in the matter of marketing their crops. I know the fine spirit the Senator from Utah has with respect to all agricultural matters, and his sympathy with and general knowledge of the needs of the farmer; and I am going to ask, in lieu of further remarks that I might make, that a letter written to me by the Secretary of Agriculture may be read at this time.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that I appreciate his position. I have talked with the Secretary of Agriculture. I have several amendments to offer to the bill, and I shall not object to its consideration on the next rule day.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. If the Senator will be kind enough to bear with me the next time and permit the consideration of the bill, I shall ask to withdraw the letter at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3089) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4174) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1749) providing for the development of hydroelectric energy at Great Falls for the benefit of the United States Government and the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3874) authorizing appropriations of funds for construction of a highway from Red Lodge, Mont., to the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park near Cooke City, Mont., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FREE TEXTBOOKS FOR DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL PUPILS

The bill (S. 3902) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] bear with me for just a moment while I ask a question? Is some revision in process of this bill which is on the calendar?

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I did not make objection to-day. I have done so in the past. When the bill comes up for consideration I shall propose certain amendments, because I think the scope of the bill is too broad.

Mr. COPELAND. May I venture to suggest that the Senator present his amendments, so that they may be printed and we may have them before us?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; if I may, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to presenting the amendments? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PHIPPS. I offer the following amendments:

On line 4, page 1, after the word "schools," strike out the comma and insert the word "and."

On line 5, after the word "schools" and the comma, strike out "and senior high schools."

On line 6——

Mr. COPELAND. What would that mean, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. PHIPPS. Just a moment. I will explain what the bill would mean after I submit this amendment.

On line 6, after the word "textbooks" and the comma, I move to strike out "supplemental books, and other necessary educational books and supplies."

So that the first section of the bill would read:

That the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall provide pupils of elementary schools and junior high schools of the District of Columbia free of charge with the use of all textbooks.

Mr. President, the objections to this bill to my mind are that extending to the senior high schools a provision for free textbooks and books of reference and other supplies that a student might have occasion to use is going too far. I have no objection whatever to the present plan of supplying textbooks to the pupils in the elementary schools. I should not object to its extension so as to include junior high schools; but when it comes to furnishing books of reference, those are in the libraries. They are available to students of the schools; and this language is broad enough so that each student might be furnished with books of reference. Other supplies, such as writing paper, pads, and pencils, and all that, I believe should be supplied by the students themselves, because otherwise they are too careless of them.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope that with the very reasonable amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado we may consider and pass the bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. I should have no objection to the passage of the bill with the acceptance of those amendments.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have several amendments to this bill.

On page 1, line 4, after the word "of," insert the word "public."

On page 1, line 4, after the word "schools," insert "public."

On page 1, line 5, after the word "and," insert "public."

Also the following amendment on page 2, after line 18, insert the following new section:

SEC. 7. No school book containing language contrary to the American principle of separation of church and state shall be taught in any school in the District of Columbia.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over under objection unless the Senator withholds his objection. Is there objection to considering the amendments proposed?

Mr. PHIPPS. May I have consideration of the amendments which I offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the amendments of the Senator from Colorado.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 4, strike out the word "schools" and the comma and insert "schools and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On line 5, strike out the comma and the words "and senior high schools."

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On line 6, strike out "supplemental books, and other necessary educational books and supplies."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President, I do not suppose there will be any objection to my amendment, just to make it certain that these books are to be books for public schools and not for sectarian schools of any kind, and that no book can be taught in the District of Columbia, by the section I add, that contains language contrary to the American doctrine of the separation of church and state. No American Senator should object to that and nobody in America should object to that. It is good, sound, American doctrine, and it looks to me as though it would be very appropriate to put it in here.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me just where the word "public" comes in there?

Mr. HEFLIN. On page 1, line 4, after the word "of," insert "public."

Mr. BRUCE. So that it will read "public elementary schools"?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. That is all right. Then what is the next one?

Mr. HEFLIN. On page 1, line 5, after the word "and," insert the word "public."

Mr. BRUCE. Exactly—just two insertions?

Mr. PHIPPS. Pardon me; should not that come before the word "schools" rather than after it?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I think I have the floor, if the Senator will wait just a minute.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Just tell me where it would come in.

Mr. HEFLIN. The next one is on page 2, after line 18, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 7. No schoolbook containing language contrary to the American principle of separation of church and state shall be taught in any school in the District of Columbia.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator, as a matter of curiosity, whether he knows that any schoolbook is now being used in the city of Washington which inculcates anything hostile to the American principle of separation of church and state?

Mr. HEFLIN. I remind the Senator that in a controversy in the Atlantic Monthly, I believe, between Doctor Fountain, a Baptist minister of New York, and Doctor Ryan, here in Washington, the dean of the Catholic University. Doctor Fountain pointed out that a certain Catholic schoolbook used in Catholic parochial schools contained the doctrine of the union of church and state; and Doctor Ryan said that it might as well have been left out, but he did not deny the charge made by Doctor Fountain.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not speaking of Catholic schools; I am speaking of public schools.

Mr. HEFLIN. Any school.

Mr. BRUCE. No; I ask the Senator whether he knows of any case in which books are being used in the public schools in the District of Columbia which are obnoxious to the principle of separation of church and state?

Mr. HEFLIN. This would cover all schools, parochial schools as well.

Mr. BAYARD. And private schools as well?

Mr. HEFLIN. It says:

No schoolbook containing language contrary to the American principle of separation of church and state shall be taught in any school in the District of Columbia.

Any person violating——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. BRUCE. I really think that would involve an investigation as to whether there are such books at the present time used in the Catholic schools.

Mr. HEFLIN. I should like to have the investigation made.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRUCE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Delaware if he asks me to yield. Did the Senator ask me to yield?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I was asking the Senator from Alabama a question.

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. I wanted to know distinctly whether the amendment was designed to cover all schools, public and private, of every character. Does the Senator know whether any private schools do teach other than the doctrine he suggests?

Mr. HEFLIN. From what I told the Senator, the controversy——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in so far as I can, I object to the Senator's amendment. I do not think he has any right to undertake to prescribe what shall be taught in private schools. If we want to run the public schools, well and good; the private schools, no.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will reply in a moment to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1900) to provide for the construction of a post road and military highway from a point on or near the Atlantic coast to a point on or near the Pacific coast, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3890) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 717) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to say, in reply to the Senator from Delaware, that he has announced a very strange and un-American doctrine, it seems to me, that we can regulate public schools but can not have anything to do with private schools. If the time ever comes when private schools can teach the union of church and State undisturbed and the State and Congress can not reach that situation, the Republic is doomed. Of course, we can reach it. The idea of taking the position that a State, or the Nation itself, can not say to any group of people teaching the youth of the country that the doctrine of the union of church and state is not right, that you can not stop them from teaching it, it seems to me is a strange and unsound position for an American Senator to take. It is strange indeed. We ought to be able to stop it. We have the power to stop it, and we are going to stop it.

I know it is unpopular with some Senators in this body to have any mention made of the Catholic question in the Senate. They shy away from it, frightened to death when you mention it. They shiver in their shoes when you broach that subject. They are courting favor with the Roman Catholic political power in the United States, but, Mr. President, I am going to dare as long as I am a Member of this body to point out the dangers that threaten my country from any and every quarter; I do not care whether they come from Protestant quarters, Jewish quarters, or Catholic quarters. I am trying my best to do my duty and serve my country in the way that I feel I should. Every time one mentions the activities of the Catholics and refers to their encroachments upon American rights and institutions, there are a few Senators in this body who are on the alert, and they are on their feet to safeguard the Catholic program, and doing what they can to prevent action from being taken if the Catholic powers that be object to it.

I for one am getting weary of it, and I do not think the day is far distant when we will have enough American Senators in this body to stand up for what the American Republic stands for, and preserve this Republic in its integrity.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not care to interrupt the Senator, but I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have said all I care to say right now.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to say just a word in explanation of my position? I am not going to discuss the question, but merely to say such a word, because otherwise I might be placed in a false position.

I asked about the object of inserting the word "public" in those two lines of the bill simply because I wished to satisfy myself as to whether there was any real need for inserting those words. Of course, none of us, I assume, would deem it to be our duty for a moment to vote schoolbooks to any but public schools. I take it for granted that it is not necessary to discuss that matter. But on examining the amendments of the Senator from Alabama I find that it is not necessary to insert the word "public" as he proposes, because it is the Board of Education of the District of Columbia that is to provide pupils of elementary schools, and so on, with books, and, of course, it would be entirely ultra vires for that board in the absence of explicit authority to furnish schoolbooks to private schools. There is no need to have the word "public" inserted. If there was, I should vote to have that done.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose some one should come and ask that they do so. There is no law that would prevent the board from furnishing them.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; there is, because it is foreign to the present powers of the Board of Education. It would be ultra vires for the Board of Education, in the absence of express, pointed authority to the contrary, to provide private schools with books at public expense. So there is no necessity for inserting the world "public."

When we come to the other amendment, with respect to placing under the ban any schoolbooks containing language contrary to the American principle of the separation of church and state, it seems to me that the question put by the Senator from Delaware is a very timely one, as to whether it is suggested that that shall include all private schools.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think we have the right to prevent private schools from teaching the doctrine of union of church and state?

Mr. BRUCE. If such a doctrine were generally being taught, yes; I would.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, what is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the 5-minute speech of the Senator from Maryland, if he wants to make one. If not, the clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, speaking on the pending bill, I desire to make some reply to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I move that Senate bill 3902 be taken up for consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to speak on whatever bill may be before us. The Senator from Alabama made a statement a moment ago which included me.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAYARD. Have I the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. BAYARD. I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, as I said, I desire to make a reply to the statement made by the Senator from Alabama a moment ago, when he undertook to include me among others of those who always rise to their feet in this Chamber when he starts to discuss a certain subject. I want to assure him very frankly that I had no such idea. I happen to have three children going to private schools in this city and I do not intend for a moment that the Senator from Alabama, or all the Senators in this Chamber, I say, with the greatest respect for them, shall dictate to me or to my children what subjects they shall study, when they shall study them, and why they shall study them. That is the reason why I objected to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

AIR CORPS

The bill (H. R. 12814) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOANS BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The resolution (S. Res. 113) favoring a restriction of loans by Federal reserve banks for speculative purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, in view of the action taken this morning, should we not indefinitely postpone the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I do not want to have the resolution indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

Mr. HEFLIN subsequently said: Mr. President, who objected to the consideration of the La Follette resolution? I thought Senators were anxious to have it agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I did not object; I merely suggested that, in view of the action taken by our adopting the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama this morning, we might properly clear the calendar of the La Follette resolution. If it is desired to have it remain on the calendar, I have no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. It touches on a different subject altogether.

Mr. PHIPPS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over and will take its place on the calendar.

TAX ASSESSMENTS UPON HON. JAMES COUZENS

The resolution (S. Res. 213) to investigate certain circumstances connected with the matter of additional tax assessments upon Hon. JAMES COUZENS was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3938) relating to the District Court of the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9024) to authorize the appointment of stenographers in the courts of the United States and to fix their duties and compensation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4304) to provide for the storage for diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Casper-Alcova reclamation project was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4305) to provide for the storage for diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Saratoga reclamation project was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5527) to prevent fraud, deception, or improper practice in connection with business before the United States Patent Office, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3866) authorizing the appointment of H. P. Milligan as a major of Infantry in the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 668) amending section 1 of the interstate commerce act was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4411) to amend the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, by providing for the delivery of cotton tendered on futures contracts at certain designated spot-cotton markets, by defining and prohibiting manipulation, by providing for the designation of cotton-futures exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF HEALTH

The bill (S. 4518) to establish and operate a national institute of health, to create a system of fellowships in said institute, and to authorize the Government to accept donations for use in ascertaining the cause, prevention, and cure of disease affecting human beings, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we could not finish the consideration of the bill in the few minutes remaining. Let it go over.

Mr. BAYARD. If there be no objection, I should like to offer an amendment to that bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Simmons
Barkley	Fess	King	Smith
Bayard	Fletcher	McKellar	Smoot
Bingham	Frazier	McMaster	Steck
Black	George	McNary	Steiwer
Blaine	Gerry	Mayfield	Stephens
Blease	Gillett	Neely	Swanson
Borah	Glass	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glenn	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Goff	Oddie	Tydings
Broussard	Gould	Overman	Tyson
Bruce	Greene	Phipps	Vandenberg
Burton	Hale	Pine	Wagner
Capper	Harris	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Harrison	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Hastings	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Couzens	Hawes	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Curtis	Hayden	Sackett	Watson
Dale	Heflin	Schall	Wheeler
Deneen	Johnson	Sheppard
Dill	Jones	Shipstead
Edge	Kendrick	Shortridge

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent, and I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3178) to provide an additional method for collecting taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. CLAGUE, Mr. TABER, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. COLLINS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7409) for the relief of John J. Campbell.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 500. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 16522. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12032. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended;

H. R. 13097. An act for the relief of Thomas W. Moore; and

H. R. 14479. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representative disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the request for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. WARREN, Mr. JONES, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

SALE OF COTTON AND GRAIN IN FUTURE MARKETS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am conscious in discussing a matter which, because it has been a rule of action so long, has become fixed in the minds of people as a necessary process of marketing, the burden will rest upon those of us who propose the change. I would have liked an opportunity to discuss it with the Senators who are to decide its fate, because it is the most important piece of legislation that will come before the Senate. More than 20,000,000 of the American people are dependent upon agriculture for their livelihood, their right to exist, their clothes to wear and food to eat, and the means to educate their children—all are involved in this measure. Therefore, at least, those who are to settle that controversy for them ought to do it with all the information they can acquire.

I intend to talk only a short time on the bill. There has been carried on, opposing this legislation, the most active lobby I have ever seen around Washington in the 16 years I have been a Member of one House or the other. They have almost broken quorums in the Senate by calling Senators out, to argue with them. They have spent first and last millions of dollars in having their personal agents come here to solicit votes against the measure and to publish literature and to send telegrams and to have agents to discuss the question before boards of trade, chambers of commerce, rotary clubs, and all such organizations that can be made use of sometimes to carry on propaganda.

In my own State of Arkansas—and I presume what is true there is true in other States—they have changed every group of cotton dealers into a board of trade. Every man who buys cotton or sells cotton or represents some mill or some combination of men engaged in purchasing or selling cotton has with his fellows been organized into a board of trade, and their first and, so far as I know their only, real activity is to send telegrams to Members of Congress stating that the legislation threatens the cotton market and is therefore ruinous to the farmers.

Mr. President, I am conscious of this propaganda. Whether or not it can control the Senate I do not know. I will know when the vote is cast. Everyone who believes that the gambling interests ought to be protected, although agriculture shall perish, will vote against this legislation. They will give whatever excuse to themselves seems good, but every thinking man and woman will know that back of it all is that they had rather the right to gamble with somebody else's sweat and blood should be preserved than that agriculture should thrive. That is all there is to the controversy.

I am going to talk about cotton, because all my life I have grown cotton and part of my life I have sold cotton. I think I know what the farmer encounters under the present conditions which confront him. I know that there can be no stable market, that it is absolutely absurd to expect a stable market until the right to gamble in the products which the farmer produces is taken away, because a gambling market thrives upon a fluctuating market. There should be no gambling, there should be no future hedging if there is to be a stable market.

One of the things that I was hopeful might come out of the McNary-Haugen bill was the elimination of the wide fluctuation that takes place every year in the prices of farm products of the country. No gambler in farm products wants a stable market. In other words, if the market moves up and down according to the law of supply and demand, if there is no wide fluctuation, there would be no incentive to bet upon the market, and there would be no money made in it. For instance, the man who buys 100 bales of cotton has to put up $1,000. He has to put up $10 on each bale on which he attempts to gamble. He can get back only $87.50 of each $100 put up, whichever way the market goes. He has to lose $12.50 on every hundred bales of cotton on which he has bet in the market. But the gamblers have realized that there might be too wide a fluctuation in the market, so in self-defense they have established a rule that there must never be for one day a greater fluctuation than $10 a bale. In other words, they do not want to do any more than wipe out the man who is in the market, because then they would become liable for the difference, so they have adopted the rule that the fluctuation must never be more than $10 a bale. Therefore that is the amount of margin that the man who goes into the market must put up.

We are told that it is necessary to have a future market so that the men who are to buy cotton and manufacture it, the textile people, may have a guaranty that their supply of cotton will cost them only so much, so they can sell their finished products in advance of manufacture and not lose money. I submit, even if that statement were the truth, that they have no right to demand that their product shall be guaranteed against fluctuation and loss at the expense of those who produce the raw material, that they shall incur no possibility of loss. In order to insure them against loss they have no right to destroy the 20,000,000 people who produce the product that they expect to spin. But I say, Mr. President, there is no truth in the statement that it is necessary to have a future market for that reason. There is no truth in the statement that legitimate hedging is the principal purpose of cotton and grain exchanges. It constitutes practically no part of the business conducted in those exchanges.

I have before me the statement of Doctor Palmer, who is in charge of cotton in the Department of Agriculture—and I said a moment ago that I should talk mostly about cotton—in which he said that under the present exchange rules the cotton market can be manipulated $7.40. No one would contend that one can hedge upon a market where a lot of gamblers can get together and move that hedge up or down, destroy it, wipe it out by such a manipulation as that, and the spinner would become the loser not only upon the cotton that he has bought but upon the hedge he may have put up.

It does not stop there. Under the able leadership of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], in an investigation held last spring and summer, it was developed that Mr. Clayton, of Anderson-Clayton Co.—and I think, by the way, the shrewdest gambler that ever went on the cotton exchange—that he had not only wiped out the lambs who had been playing in the market but he preyed on the members of the exchange also, and therefore was brought here by a congressional investigation to ascertain how he did it.

Mr. Marsh, who for a long time had been the president of the cotton exchange—I think first and last he was its president for 18 years—was the complaining witness. He said that Anderson, Clayton & Co. manipulated the market so that they broke everybody concerned with it. Mr. Clayton made a very plausible defense. He said he played the game according to the rules. I do not fall out with him about that. They made the rules and he went in and manipulated the market under the rules and grew enormously rich out of it, while others lost; not only the farmers suffered but the gamblers on the other side likewise suffered.

I should like to read just a line or two of what he said about future market. We hear it contended that the future market is a world market; that it is the index of what the product is worth all over the world, and therefore it tends to stabilize the market. It shows what the product is worth and therefore is a guide to the man who has the commodity to sell and the man who has it to buy. But if that is true Mr. Clayton is a liar, and I do not think he is. I was impressed with his candor. He said that a future market might be influenced by local conditions; that, first and last, it might be considered a local market, and it did not reflect world conditions and could not because it was influenced by local conditions. He spoke to that effect, and

I myself asked him some questions, although I was not a member of the committee. The fact is that Liverpool, which is looked upon as the world index for cotton, and New York parted company 200 points, or $20 a bale; so that American cotton was worth $20 a bale less in Liverpool than it was in New York. It ought to have been worth in Liverpool as much more as the transportation charges, the handling charges and the insurance added to the price; but the price was manipulated so that it dropped $20 a bale, plus the ordinary carrying charges to reach Liverpool from New York or from the cotton centers of the South, which charges ought to have been somewhere between four and six dollars a bale. Mr. Clayton said that was the result of local conditions in Liverpool. I object to a general strike or a prolonged coal strike or a textile strike in Liverpool taking $20 a bale from the cotton of the men and women in Alabama or Mississippi or Louisiana or South Carolina who have grown it, because, God knows, there never has been $20 a bale profit in its production, and that price represents practically 50 per cent of what cotton on the average has sold for from the time of the Civil War until the World War. The hearing was a voluminous one, and I am going to take only a minute to read what Mr. Clayton said:

> In the final analysis it must be a local market as to the value of cotton in that particular place.
> Senator CARAWAY. In other words, it is simply inevitable that we must know that a future market is not a world market but a future market.
> Mr. CLAYTON. It is a world market in the sense that the traders all over the world use it to get an interest in cotton; but in the final analysis that value must be in the place in which that contract calls for delivery.
> Senator CARAWAY. And local conditions can affect it?
> Mr. CLAYTON. Local conditions can affect it and did, in Liverpool.

He referred finally to the fact that, after all, local conditions affect the price. Local conditions, as I said a moment ago, affected it in Liverpool; they affected it to the extent of $20 a bale plus the carrying charges, which, if Liverpool were the index market, would have wiped out every cotton grower in America.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. What was the particular local condition in Liverpool?

Mr. CARAWAY. The coal strike and the depressed condition in Great Britain growing out of and following the general strike. There was a local condition; there was dead business in England, and, therefore, the price of cotton was depressed. Yet we are asked to maintain a condition in America that makes us accept Liverpool quotations as the index of the value of our products grown in the fields of the South and on the plains of the West.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be interested to know how long that great discrepancy existed and whether it affected the condition in this country on the exchanges.

Mr. CARAWAY. It existed for two or three months. It ruined people by the thousands in this country. That is what brought about this investigation. Marsh and his friends got on the wrong side of the market when Clayton and his friends were manipulating the market. They made the price of futures part company with New Orleans to the extent of about $4 a bale, as I now recall. Clayton very candidly said if he had not done certain things which I will explain in a moment they would have taken the shirt off his back. I asked him, "Having done that, you took the shirt off the other fellows' backs, did you not?" and he rather modestly admitted that he had left them with no more clothes than law required them to wear.

I am not falling out with Mr. Clayton. He played the game according to the rules. Here is what he did. He carried to New York 200,000 bales of cotton, approximately, so that when he was short on the market and somebody called him he could tender that cotton. Nobody wanted cotton. They do not sell cotton on the exchanges, despite what may be said here about there being market places. I venture the assertion that not one broker in a thousand and certainly not one of a hundred thousand of the people who speculate on the market would know a bale of cotton if they were to see it. They sell cotton in Chicago and in New York where certainly they do not know a thing about it. They could not find a warehouse where the bales are stored. They do not have any interest in cotton.

Mr. Clayton took this cotton up there with him. Talk about the exchanges regulating their own abuses! That cotton was reclassified, although it had been classified by the Government of the United States under the Department of Agriculture, and it was found, as I now recollect, that nearly 20 per cent of it was absolutely untenderable; he had no right to offer it on the market. Yet he had kept it there and broken a rising market time after time with it, and at the same time and by the same means robbed everybody that grew a bale of cotton.

You can not have a stable market if you are going to have a gambler's market; that is impossible. If you believe the farmer is entitled to a stable market, you must give it to him by destroying this gambling den. There is no better way to keep him an unstable, fluctuating market than the present system of selling futures and thus to destroy his market.

I grow cotton; I have a place that is not a mile and a half from the field to the gin and the station where the cotton is shipped. I recall that two years ago, being on the place, we started to town with some of our cotton, and speculators broke the market $10 a bale while we went a mile and a half. There was not $10 a bale in it for the men and women who had toiled for 12 months to produce it and harvest it and process it and get it ready for the market. By a cablegram from Liverpool they wiped out every possibility of profit on 12 months of toil that these people had given to producing a cotton crop. If that seems to be a wise and humane way to treat people who feed and clothe the world, why, God bless your soul, vote against the bill and vote to perpetuate that condition.

It is said that it is legitimate hedging. It is not so. You can not hedge on this market; you can gamble on it, but you can not hedge on it; you can not hedge on any market that can be manipulated. It was hoped that under the Capper bill the grain market would be proof against manipulation; and yet in 1926—I have the quotations here, but I will not take the time to read them in the RECORD, because they appeared in all the newspapers of the country—there was sold, as I now recall, in one day in the wheat pit on the board of trade in Chicago more wheat than was grown by every American farmer that year, and the price of wheat was broken 53 cents a bushel during the time of this manipulation. There was a rumor one day that a certain man who was long on wheat was going out of the market, and the wheat market was broken 15¾ cents a bushel on the report that somebody was changing his position; that he was no longer supporting the market; that he was no longer a bull, but had become a bear. His swapping sides in that market—just the rumor that he was going to change sides—robbed the American producers of wheat of 15¾ cents a bushel. In other words, it cost the farmers more than they could possibly have made as profit if every farmer in America had obtained a reasonable profit for his wheat. The rumor of a change of position of one man had that effect.

I picked up the other day a rather interesting article. It says:

> Foreigners were among the sellers of May wheat in Chicago early in the day—

That was one day in February; I have forgotten the date, and I do not believe I have it—> possibly to hedge against Argentine purchases. The Argentine interest of 125,000,000 bushels of wheat is more than 10,000,000 bushels less than the total possible supply. These foreigners coming here to hedge against gambling down in Argentina broke the price of wheat 3 cents a bushel in Chicago.

In other words, under this system of marketing a group of gamblers in Argentina manipulated our market in order to hedge against a possible shift in the market in South America and cost our farmers more than they actually make profit on a bushel of wheat.

I have another article here taken from a financial journal—I will not take the time to read it, but I will put it in the RECORD—in which it is said that last month the market did not respond to the law of supply and demand at all; that it went wild on a gamble in the market.

Now take the question of hedging. A legitimate hedge is this: If I want a product delivered to me next October, I can go out and buy it now and have it delivered to me then. That is legitimate; I have no objection to that. I have no objection to any man who has something to sell selling it and delivering it this year or next year or the year after next if he has it. I have no objection if he is going to produce it to letting him sell it if he has a reasonable opportunity to expect that he will have it to deliver. I think that is legitimate business. I have no objection to the man who buys that contract from him selling it again, and to having it sold as many times as there can be found a buyer; but I want this contract for future delivery to rest upon a product either in existence or in process of being created. That is all I ask; that is all any legitimate hedge could be.

If a man who owns a textile mill wants to hedge, if he wants to know what his cotton is going to cost him delivered in his city next October or November or December or in whatever month he may want it, I have no objection to his going to the man who has the cotton or to the man who is growing cotton, and buying for future delivery as much as he wants. That is legitimate. All I object to is that he shall buy from somebody who does not have and when he never expects to receive what he has bought. That is gambling; that is what destroys the cotton and grain market, not only of America but of the world.

It hurts both ways. You will find that the price of the flour that the poor eat and everybody eats is based upon the highest possible level at which wheat is quoted for the season for which it is manufactured. If it is quoted on a future market at $1.75, every pound of flour that goes into the market will be priced upon a possible cost of $1.75 per bushel for wheat. It makes no difference if the miller actually buys the wheat at 75 cents a bushel; it does not lower the price of flour, because he says, "You know, we hedged against a possible $1.75," and every consumer of flour is charged as if the wheat brought the farmer that much. On the other hand, the farmer is compelled to sell upon the lowest quotations that are made in the market. Therefore, this benevolent institution maintained in New York and Chicago and New Orleans robs both the producer and the consumer, and makes a profit for no one except the manipulators of the market.

I know, and everybody who has handled cotton knows—I am talking about that principally—that the price of cotton will follow every future decline. The actual selling of spot-cotton will follow every future decline. If there is a drop of 1 cent a bale in Liverpool it will be reflected five times over in the price of cotton that you try to sell in Arkansas. On the other hand, when the market is fluctuating, the buyer always refuses to follow the market up. He says, "This is a speculative market, and therefore I can not follow it up." But he will follow it down every blessed time it falls. He will make that the world's market for your product; but when it goes up he will say that is a gamblers' market, and we are not following the market up.

I have seen it done over and over, and everybody who ever grew a bale of cotton has observed it fall. Every time there is an intimation in Liverpool or Bremen or anywhere else that cotton is going to sell off, they follow it down, but they refuse to follow it up.

I said a moment ago that I did not intend to take much of your time. I am going, however, to refer to a matter debated here to-day.

Congress passed a law providing that the man who keeps a gambling house here in the District of Columbia may be sent to the penitentiary for five years; and we have a law against bookmaking. In other words, when they are running races at Laurel, it is unlawful to sell a chance on that Laurel race. Congress has thought it was immoral, and has so declared it. You can not play poker without violating the law; and I presume that is the law in every State in this Union. And yet those people are gambling only on what they themselves own. They are affecting nobody's fortunes but their own. On the other hand, you license and legalize the greatest gambling game that ever existed in the history of the earth, where the man does not gamble on his own wealth, but on everything that men and women and children who grow agricultural products anywhere in the world produce. He gambles on the necessities of life. He destroys the producer. He increases the cost to the consumer. He enriches nobody but himself.

I do not believe there is a Senator present who would vote to open here in the District of Columbia a gambling casino like the one in Monte Carlo. You would say, "This is a Nation that abhors gambling, and we will not do it." Every preacher in America would go into his pulpit to denounce you if you did it; and yet when you vote down this measure you vote to license a gambling concern that reaches every hamlet and every home in America. The amount they gamble in Monte Carlo in a year would not keep this gambling machine going a day; and they gamble there on their own money, while these people here gamble on the sweat and toil of everybody who produces an agricultural product.

That is the moral side of it, and it has a tremendous appeal to me. I would feel ashamed to send anybody to jail or, as I read the other day, to send a man to the penitentiary for four years for gambling here in the District of Columbia in a poker game, and at the same time vote to license everybody who wants to gamble for any amount they see fit, and print their quotations in every newspaper that goes into the mails, so that they can reach everybody with a spare penny in America, and absorb not only what they can spare but what they can not legitimately spare to find a mart in these exchanges. More people have made defalcations, more bank cashiers, more county officials, more trusted employees in every occupation have gone wrong, because of stock gambling than all the other causes; and yet we license it.

I know this: I know you are going to be told, and you have been told—because I presume there is not a Senator in the Senate Chamber who has not been called out by somebody who wanted to lobby with him about this—they will tell you what hurtful things would happen if the future markets were destroyed. Well, there are lots of things in which there is not any future market. There is none in cattle; there is none in hogs; there is none in wool, although Chicago was trying to establish a wool market last year so that they could have something else to gamble in. There is not any future market in vegetables, in apples, in potatoes, although Chicago the other day wanted to establish a produce exchange and gamble in that, and they were trying to list the various things. I have the list lying here somewhere. I should like to read it, but I will not take the time to hunt it up just now. They were listing the products that they would like to sell and buy on the exchange. There were potatoes, apples, squashes, pumpkins, and a lot of their by-products; I do not know what they might be, but there was quite a long list of things in which it would be necessary to have a future market.

I do not know whether they will succeed in establishing it or not. Possibly they will, because they have had such good luck with other gambling in farm products that they would afford some a chance to make more money.

Take a stock-exchange seat: I can remember when they were worth $25,000 apiece. They are now worth $600,000. In other words, the privilege of gambling will sell in New York at $600,000—the license to prey upon everyone who has not any more sense than to come into their market, which they control and manipulate.

There used to be an adage when I was a boy that nobody but a fool would bet on the other man's trick. I think there is wisdom in it. Why should you put your money into a market that you do not control, that you can not influence? You know that somebody does control it, somebody influences it, for this reason:

If a man will sell you something that he does not own, that does not exist and never will exist, and promises to deliver you this something next October or pay you the difference between what he says it is worth now and what it will be worth then, he is either a fool or has some way to manipulate the market so that he can make the margin fall his way and not against him. A wise man would not sell that which does not exist, and pledge his fortune to deliver an article that he knows never will be in existence or pay the difference between that price at which he offers to sell it and what it may be worth on the delivery day, unless he has some power to control the price on delivery day, because left uninfluenced nobody can tell what the price will be.

For instance, as soon as this trading year is closed, but before there is a bale of cotton in existence that will be grown in the year 1929, before the cotton is even planted, before anybody knows whether there will be 17,000,000 bales or 10,000,000 bales, and before anybody knows what the world's demands will be, I could find a man who would sell me 200,000,000 bales of cotton, when he knows there will not be one-twentieth of that much produced, if I had the money to pay the margin. The man who will sell me that, I said a minute ago, is either a fool or he can manipulate the market; and, since he has money, I must decide that he is not a fool, because fools and their money, according to an old adage, soon part. Therefore, I know that he can manipulate that market. I know it because nearly all the wealth of this country is now owned by people who are playing the market.

A gentleman whose name I shall not call, a very highly reputable man, who was the president of one of the great banks in New York until a few years ago, was in my office one day last week, and he showed me deposit-slips of over $90,000 that he had made speculating in one product in the last 60 days; and he told me that while he had retired from business, and was giving practically no attention even to the stock market, he had made this year $750,000. Well, now, somebody lost it, because these stock-gambling transactions do not create wealth. They may destroy it, but they can not create it; and yet you will find nearly every bit of the wealth of the country being absorbed by the gambling markets. Why, the suggestion of the Federal Reserve Board to curb this wild speculation shows that it realized that nearly all the money in America was being taken from legitimate trade and absorbed in a wild speculative venture in New York, a great gambling venture.

It is true that I am not trying to curb that market. I am not dealing with it. I think it ought to be dealt with; but I am seeking to deal in this matter with the things that I know something about personally. I am talking about farm products.

They will tell you, for everybody in the world who is able to read has been told, and will be told over and over again, that these future markets afford an index of what farm products are worth, and therefore keep the farmer from being skinned by the speculator. Anybody who believes that the speculator is engaged in trying to protect and stabilize the farmers' market could have a certificate from the Presiding Officer here and get admitted into a home for the feeble-minded in any State in the Union. No other proof would be required of your condition to entitle you to be cared for for the remainder of your natural life.

They will say, "Why, just look what happened in 1914, when the Great War broke out, and the future market was closed. Cotton went down to 6 cents a pound and you could not sell it."

Well, to start with, if the future market could have kept the market up, why on earth did they close the future market? Was not the fact these markets closed an admission that the gamblers could not maintain a price? They all went out of business just as soon as the sea was closed. That was a concession that a future market does not make a real market, and can not make a market. It was a confession that all they do is to bet on what the other fellow's market is and that they quit whenever they can not manipulate the price. Why, if they could have maintained the market, or if maintaining a future market could have made cotton sell at 14 cents a pound, they ought all to have been put before a firing squad if they walked out on the agriculturists of this country and let them be bankrupted because a great war broke out in Europe. Everybody knows that; and yet you will hear that often as one of the convincing arguments that they ought to have a future market—"Look what happened to cotton in 1914."

Everybody knows but the man who will make that argument that what happened to cotton in 1914 was that nobody knew who was going to control the sea, and nobody could get his cotton across the sea. There was nobody buying anything then except instrumentalities of death and the market for cotton, of course, was destroyed; but it did not die because the future market was closed. The future market closed because the market died. It was just the other way round. They were not patriotic. They would have gambled while the best blood of America was soaked up in the soil of France, and they did do it. They had no compunctions of conscience. They were not withholding their activities in order to aid anybody, but simply to take care of their own pockets. I say again, if the closing of the future markets in 1914 resulted in the losses which came to the wheat growers and the corn growers and the cotton growers of America, if they could have maintained a future market and thereby maintained the price, every one of them ought to have been stood up in front of a firing squad instead of having been given a lease of life to prey further on the farmers of this country.

Let me return to the situation in my own section of the country, and I say again I know more about cotton than I do about corn. Somebody has facetiously said that all that is needed for a corn market is a fruit jar. I do not know whether that is true or not. Others, no doubt, possibly have more information about it than I have.

Referring to the plantations in my section of the country, I think that every one of them of 500 acres or more that I know of, except one, has passed out of the hands of the farmer who was the original owner into the possession of some broker in the last few years, certainly within the last 20 years. That has been the rule everywhere. I know of one cotton merchant in St. Louis, whose money was not invested in buying and selling staple cotton, who owned more plantations in my State than any hundred farmers in it. Every one of the farms had been lost by some fool who speculated with the brokers in the cotton market; or the owners were forced to sell because the market had been so manipulated that the cost of production was higher than the price at which they could sell their product.

If the future markets are responsible for the present market conditions in America, if those maintaining them will stand up and plead guilty to that, could they ask us to continue them? What farmer do Senators know who has made anything off his farm in the last 8 or 10 years? When those maintaining the future market claim that they are responsible for present conditions they condemn themselves.

I imagine that about fifteen or sixteen million bales of cotton has been the yearly production of cotton in America on the average. But there are sold in the future markets about 200,000,000 bales a year. Before you conclude that that is a reasonable transaction in what is produced and what is traded in you must know that nearly one-fourth of the cotton, quite a fifth of it, indeed, is long-staple cotton, and that is not traded in on the exchanges at all. You can not buy nor sell on the market for future delivery a single bale of what is known as staple cotton.

We are told that there must be a future market for the sale of cotton, but every bale of staple cotton, which constitutes at least quite a fifth of the cotton produced, is actually sold without a future market. All of the cotton grown in Arizona, all the cotton grown in New Mexico, all the cotton grown in California, and in all those other Western States—I say all, and I think I am correct in that—is marketed without a future market. Then there is a great deal of cotton that is under the grade that is traded in in the market, that can not be tendered on the market, that is not traded in on the market. Therefore I say that if there are 15,000,000 bales of cotton a third of that can safely be subtracted as cotton that can not be traded in at all, and never was traded in, and there remain 10,000,000 bales against which the speculators "hedge" 200,000,000 bales.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I ask the Senator if the fluctuations observable in the prices of the long staple cotton not traded in upon the market are similar to the fluctuations in the ordinary product that is traded in on the market?

Mr. CARAWAY. They are not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, the same fluctuations do not occur?

Mr. CARAWAY. No. One year there may be a premium of 4 or 5 cents on staple. The next year it may be 1 or 2 cents a pound, but the price does not fluctuate, as does the price of cotton traded in on the exchange.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rather think that the staple cotton, outside of the ordinary upland cotton—not entirely, as the Senator from Arkansas says, but I think largely—follows the ordinary fluctuations. It depends a good deal on the amount of staple cotton that is made.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, it follows the law of supply and demand. It bears a premium sometimes of 5 or 6 cents, sometimes not more than 1 or 2 cents. It is sold in accordance with the law of supply and demand.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If a man has long staple cotton, how does he know whether he is getting the right price or not?

Mr. CARAWAY. He knows it because he knows what he can get for it. He has to sound out the millers or the other agencies that are going to consume it. While they undertake to tell you that long staple will be so many points above the market, it is not the truth, and there is no way to verify it, and there is nobody to hedge you against it, and therefore you have nothing in the world to fear from the gamblers.

The long-staple cotton growers have organized themselves. They have not as much cotton in the market, and they have no future markets and have organized themselves, and sell their own product. What little money has been made by cotton growers has been made on staples. The only cotton association that is now solvent, so far as I know—and I think I know—is the organization of the long-staple cotton growers of Mississippi. They have made money because they have organized and controlled their own markets, and they make the gamblers keep their hands off of it, but they are the only ones who have made a cent. The other cotton associations have passed out. I have been a member of a cotton-growers' cooperative association for five or six years, and I know that 8 or 10 per cent of the producers of a product can not control it. We are compelled to admit that we are unable to protect the cotton growers against the fluctuations caused by the gamblers.

Somebody ought to control the market, but every one who has any sense knows that you can not control a market when a lot of gamblers in New York or New Orleans can run it up or run it down by raids on the market. You can not control it under those circumstances. Yet somebody has to control the market. Either the producer or the purchaser can control it, unless gamblers in the product cause fluctuations in the market. As it is now, the producer has to hedge at an enormous expense, at a great loss, to prevent the gambler ruining him, and since the farmer has no way to hedge he sees bankruptcy overtake him.

If the futures market did not exist, as it now exists, the farmer who has the product to sell would be in control of the market, because there is no law to compel him to sell. He could say to the people who have to buy, "There is no way for you to protect yourself except to buy from somebody who has, and I have and nobody else has, and therefore I control the market." But as long as somebody can sell what does not exist, he can control the market.

In conclusion, I want to say that I do not object to a man selling for future delivery what he has. The bill I have offered would not prevent a man from selling what he had, or what he had a right to expect he will have. If a farmer is going to produce a thousand bushels of wheat this year, and if the mills want to buy now for future delivery what he has, or what he has a reasonable right to expect he will produce, I have no objection, and this bill would not prevent him selling it for delivery at whatever date they can agree upon for delivery, whether next July, September, August, or any month that the miller and the producer may agree upon. Or if the miller should buy from the farmer, and decides he has more than he wants, there is nothing in the bill to prevent him from reselling that contract to anybody who wants to buy. That is legitimate. The other is gambling.

This matter has been passed upon by the courts in most of the States of the Union, and by the Supreme Court of the United States. I brought here the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; I will not take time to read it now. It laid down this doctrine: That if you sell what you do not expect to deliver, and the other man buys what he does not expect to demand, but both expect to settle upon commercial differences, however they may be arrived at, that is gambling, call it whatever name you choose to give to it. That contract is void in any court in America. The Court of Appeals in every circuit, the decisions of which I have examined, has laid down that rule. The Supreme Court of the United States has also. The supreme court in every State I know of has adopted the rule that if you are selling what you do not own and never expect to deliver to somebody who does not expect to receive it, but you are to get together and settle on differences, arrived at by whatever process you may employ, you are engaged in gambling.

The farmer has the right to demand at least that you do not thus gamble in that which he in the sweat of his brow produces.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have discussed this subject so often since I have been a Member of this body that I feel loath to take up the time of the Senate now in any prolonged discussion. I would like to remind this body that this measure, in more or less the same form, has been before Congress for at least 50 years.

Mr. CARAWAY. And it has been defeated by the same crowd every time.

Mr. RANSDELL. Perhaps so. It has been defeated, however, every time, and it is going to be defeated again.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what the exchange told me.

Mr. RANSDELL. In 1892 my predecessor, afterwards Chief Justice of the United States, Edward Douglass White, delivered a wonderful speech in this body in opposition to what was then called the Hatch antioption bill, along exactly the same lines as this proposed legislation. Similar measures have been up again and again and again. I am not going to attempt to discuss it at any length; but I wish to say to the Senators who honor me by listening that this business on the cotton exchanges and the grain exchanges of America has been conducted for a great many years, certainly from 50 to 60 years. It is a very large business. It enters into the ordinary, usual, everyday methods of selling and handling the great grain and cotton crops of America. We do not know how to handle grain and cotton aside from the agencies furnished by these exchanges, and this bill would completely destroy those great agencies handling grain and cotton and would offer nothing in lieu thereof.

Let me ask this common-sense question: If there be evils in the methods of transacting business on the exchanges, would it not be wise, would it not be proper, for the lawmaker seeking correction of those evils to suggest methods of relief? Why does he seek to destroy the agencies? Why not correct what is wrong if there be anything wrong? Why disrupt business in the country—and I assure you, sir, it would be a terrific disruption of business if we should pass this bill.

One of the greatest agencies of modern times is insurance. We have insurance for every kind of business. It exists in every walk of life and in every business under the sun. I know of no kind of insurance available to transactions on the grain and cotton markets except the sale of grain or cotton on future contract.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator who that insures. Does it insure the farmer or does it insure the speculator or the dealer?

Mr. RANSDELL. In my judgment, it insures everyone.

Mr. BROOKHART. But it only indirectly affects the farmer.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think it affects the farmer directly, and I will try to show it. Let me ask the Senator a question. We have, and I am sure the Senator will admit it, hundreds of thousands of producers of grain and hundreds of thousands of producers of cotton. We have only a few mills in the United States and in the world at large which consume cotton, and only a limited number which directly mill the grain preparatory to its consumption by the people who eat it.

Mr. BROOKHART. But the mill——

Mr. RANSDELL. Wait a moment! Pardon me. I am going to ask this question and then I will give the Senator all the time he wishes.

In what shape would the farmer be if he did not have somebody or some agency to protect him from a possible combination of the millers, for instance, who handle cotton or grain? I know that mill men as a rule are high-grade men. I know they are great manufacturers. I know they have contributed wonderfully to the wealth of the country. But I say to you, Senator, that there are only a limited number of mills which handle cotton, using that as an illustration right now—less, perhaps, than a thousand of them in America. I do not know how many there are abroad, but perhaps 1,000 or 1,500. There are hundreds of thousands of producers. It would be entirely possible for the mills to form a combination and say, "We are going to get out of the cotton market. We think cotton is high enough now and we will simply quit buying." What would happen to the cotton producer then? He certainly would be on the rocks.

But what does happen to him now under a circumstance like that? The so-called gamblers, the speculators, not only of this country, but of Canada and Europe, Asia, Africa, and South America, come into the market and say, "Cotton is low enough and I am going to buy some cotton. The mill people are all getting out of the market and are not buying. I will go in and buy some cotton now." Immediately the price steadies. That has a steadying, stabilizing effect, an effect which causes the farmer to get better prices for his cotton. The same thing applies to grain.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. The point I am making is that the farmers do not do this hedging themselves. They do not sell or buy cotton in the exchange, unless it might be some big farmer, and there are not many of those who do it.

Mr. RANSDELL. A great many of them do not, and a great many do, but what difference does it make whether they sell directly and have the price go up or whether the result of the trading in the exchanges causes the price to go up? They get the benefit of it.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator is imagining a case where the millers would combine and beat down the price. Let me extend that imagination just a little and suppose that the millers and speculators all combine to beat down the price until they get the farmers' cotton; then afterwards what would happen?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is not stating a supposable case. It would be entirely feasible for a few hundred or possibly a thousand or two thousand millers to combine, but does the Senator indicate in a serious way that he could get the speculators of the world to combine to beat the price down? Let me suggest to the Senator that whenever he sells a commodity he has to find a buyer. There must be a buyer for every sale.

Mr. BROOKHART. How many exporters of cotton are there?

Mr. RANSDELL. I could not answer the question.

Mr. BROOKHART. About 50 agencies, are there not?

Mr. RANSDELL. I could not answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] stated that at one time in the RECORD.

Mr. RANSDELL. It may be; I do not know.

Mr. BROOKHART. There are only about 50 of them, and they export about 65 per cent of all of the exportable cotton of the world.

Mr. RANSDELL. Of the exportable cotton of this country.

Mr. BROOKHART. Of the world, as I understand it.

Mr. RANSDELL. We export about 60 to 65 per cent of what we make in the United States, but we do not make all the cotton in the world. There is considerable cotton made in India and Egypt, in parts of Africa, and in South America.

Mr. BROOKHART. As I recollect—and I am only speaking from recollection—we only export a little over half of what we produce in this country.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; something between 60 and 65 per cent of what we produce is usually exported.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is about as big a proportion, as I recollect it, of the world's whole exportation of cotton.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have stated it as I understand it.

Mr. BROOKHART. What proportion is it of the world export? Does the Senator know?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can only say that we export of this country's production in the neighborhood of 60 to 65 per cent. My impression is that in round numbers the United States produces about two-thirds of all the cotton of the world. About all the cotton we know anything about that enters into trade outside of our own is that which is exported from India, Egypt, South America, and Mexico, and the other countries where it is made. What those countries consume at home I do not believe anybody could tell.

Mr. BROOKHART. If we produce two-thirds, our export cotton would necessarily be more than one-half of the exportable cotton of the world.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not understand the Senator's point at all.

Mr. BROOKHART. My point is this——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt?

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Did the Senator from Iowa ask how much cotton was exported or what percentage of all the cotton exported by the world is American cotton?

Mr. BROOKHART. The latter.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have told the Senator that two or three times. It is from 60 to 65 per cent.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; I understood the Senator to say it was that proportion of the American production. There is a certain amount exported from other countries. What proportion of all the cotton of the world is exported cotton?

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator from South Carolina can answer the Senator from Iowa, I am glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think any really definite percentages have ever been made as to what proportion of all the exported cotton the American cotton is. I think it is around 45 to 50 per cent.

Mr. RANSDELL. Of the world's export, the Senator means?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. That would mean that almost no cotton produced anywhere else is used in its own country.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator will understand that the India cotton is produced under the auspices, of course, of the British Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; and a great deal of it is spun right in the India mills and is not exported.

Mr. SMITH. We hardly consider that which is consumed in Manchester and Leeds and Lyon and that group around the canal in England. The other cotton is Egyptian cotton which really is not, in common parlance, used as cotton at all. It is really a tree silk, so far as its use is concerned. But for the sake of the argument and for the sake of the legislation we are now seeking, Egyptian cotton may well be eliminated from the discussion.

But Argentina makes cotton. There is some made in China and practically all of it consumed there. Of course China imports some American cotton. I think that it is safe to say that the world's export—that is, cotton passing from one country to a foreign country—is 45 to 50 per cent American cotton.

Mr. BROOKHART. I saw some figures in the general investigation of the farm problem which indicated a higher percentage than that. I think perhaps that ought to be determined definitely, if it is possible to do it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator indicate what difference it makes, if any, whether it is 45 or 65 per cent?

Mr. BROOKHART. It makes this difference in discussing the question of margins, that if there are only 50 exporters of cotton, there are only a few people to combine in order to control the market so far as the farmers are concerned.

Mr. RANSDELL. Even if there are 45 or 50, as the Senator states, a great deal of cotton is consumed in this country and we would have to have a combination of the mills with the exporters in order to control the price of American cotton.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is not this true? Does not every textile man in America belong to the textile institute?

Mr. RANSDELL. I presume it is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. Therefore they speak with one voice.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know that they speak with one voice, but I say to the Senator that they could speak with one voice in fixing the price if it were not for other outside agencies.

Mr. CARAWAY. They do that anyway. The outside agencies do not interfere with them. They do speak with one voice and buy with one dollar.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is a wise man. He probably knows better about it than I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will ask the Senator if he does not think so?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not think so at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if they do not all belong to one institution.

Mr. SMITH. I think they are practically all in it. In my own time I want to call attention to that very fact. When the Senator from Louisiana shall have concluded I shall be very glad to make what contribution I can to the discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I gladly yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am simply asking this for information. The Senator was making the point a little while ago that these institutions tend to stabilize the prices, that they prevent that result which he says would follow if all mills were to say "We will not buy any more cotton." I understand the Senator means, and I want to ask him if he means it, that on the exchanges there are two parties, the bears on one side and the bulls on the other side. They are fighting each other and that fight, he means, as I understand him, prevents this combination which he says would be so ruinous.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is correct. Those bulls and bears, I will say to the Senator, are made up of a great many people throughout the United States and Canada and the world other than those who desire cotton to spin in their mills.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is one class trying to depress the price?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And another class trying to advance the price?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that conflict keeps up the price?

Mr. RANSDELL. It does. We had a striking illustration of what would happen and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] discussed it somewhat. Let me remind the Senator from North Carolina what happened when the exchanges closed during the World War.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did they close?

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me answer this question and then I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator will never answer my question.

Mr. RANSDELL. In the World War the exchanges stopped, I think, from August until November—several months at any rate—and the price of cotton went down, down, down. There was nobody to buy. There was no speculation. There were no bulls and bears, the one trying to push the price up and the other down—the bull with his horns trying to toss the price up and the bear with his claws trying to pull it down. We could not have these transactions on the exchange because the exchanges were closed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did they close?

Mr. RANSDELL. They closed as the result of the war.

Mr. CARAWAY. But why?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know why, but they closed and remained closed until November.

Mr. CARAWAY. If they had stayed open, does the Senator think the price of cotton would been kept up?

Mr. RANSDELL. The price of cotton began to go up as soon as they opened.

Mr. CARAWAY. They opened when the price of cotton went up.

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I have a dozen reports from different sources, if I chose to take the time to present them——

Mr. CARAWAY. Take the market reports, which are much better. Does the Senator think they could have kept up the market if they had stayed open?

Mr. RANSDELL. I think if they had stayed open the market never would have fallen as abruptly as it did. My reason for saying that is not the Senator's opinion or mine, but it is the opinion of innumerable economists who testified before the committee at the time.

Any Senator who desires to read on that subject, not my views but the views of many papers published contemporaneously, which are entitled to consideration——

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, will the Senator tell me why the exchanges closed?

Mr. RANSDELL. I presume that the World War completely disorganized all kinds of business and exchanges closed on that account.

Mr. CARAWAY. If they had remained open, and they could have kept up the market for wheat, and the market for cotton, those who operate them ought to be confined in the penitentiary for breaking the wheat market and the cotton market, and ruining the farmers, ought they not?

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator now says that if the exchanges had stayed open the prices would have stayed up——

Mr. RANSDELL. I said the prices would have been a good deal more stable than they were; that they fell a great deal more than they would have otherwise fallen.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would not want to legislate for people who were so unpatriotic as to quit, and break every farmer in America when the war came.

Mr. RANSDELL. Has not the Senate been fairly kind in legislation to the railroads?

Mr. CARAWAY. I voted against the bill, if that was being kind to them.

Mr. RANSDELL. We acquired the railroads; we took them over when the war disorganized everything.

Mr. CARAWAY. We did not take over the exchanges. The Senator does not think that the World War disorganized the price of cotton, does he? It was the closing of the exchanges which did that and not the war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will not the Senator tell us why they closed the exchanges?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not tell the Senator, but I know, as a fact, that they closed; I know, as a fact, that they remained closed for three or four months under the general disorganization prevalent in America; I know, as a fact, that when they opened, and when the speculators throughout the world began to deal on the markets and on the exchanges, cotton began to go up. I know in the meantime that we had a "buy a bale" movement, and if ever a people were in the slough of despond it was those of the South during that period.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suppose that if the exchanges were closed they were closed by direction of some governmental authority?

Mr. RANSDELL. They may have been; I do not so understand. If they were, I do not know it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well, they were closed temporarily; but is the Senator entirely without information as to why they were closed?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not give any definite information. I know that when the World War broke out there was great excitement throughout the world; ships were being sunk by the German submarines; we could not ship cotton safely abroad because the ship carrying cotton was likely to be destroyed by the submarines. All business became disorganized, and there was practically chaos for a while. I suppose that was the reason.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Am I correct, then, in the assumption that they were closed by the directors themselves?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the directors closed them because the conditions were so uncertain that it was impossible to conduct them satisfactorily?

Mr. RANDSDELL. That is my general understanding. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] can enlighten the Senator on that point. If he can do so, I will be glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there was a combination of circumstances the like of which, perhaps, will never happen again in the history of this country and in the history of cotton production. In 1914 the war broke out, just about the time when the size of the cotton crop was known. As soon as war was declared there was demoralization, of course, on account of the scope of the war; and, on top of that, we made that year the largest cotton crop ever made in the history of America by some two and a quarter million bales in excess of the normal quantity. The demoralization in the channels of trade, the outlook for the supply—these two elements combining—produced such a chaotic condition that the whole cotton business, both in Europe and America, was closed temporarily until there could be found some means of determining how the trade might go on.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was by the voluntary action of the directors of the exchanges?

Mr. SMITH. I think it was by their voluntary action.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to ask him a question, does he think that if the exchanges had remained open the price would have broken?

Mr. SMITH. I think the price would have broken whether there were exchanges or not.

Mr. CARAWAY. The closing of the exchanges, then, did not break the price?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think the closing of the exchanges broke the price, but this is what I think happened; it was a condition and not a theory: Of course, the mills realized that an enormous amount of cotton had been made and they were only consuming so much.

It was a revelation to the world that we made sixteen and a quarter million bales that year, while the best prognosticators of consumption stated we would not consume more than 10,000,000 bales, which would leave out of a one year's crop approximately 6,000,000 bales unconsumed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. SMITH. Let me finish this statement, if you please.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean that we would consume 10,000,000 bales?

Mr. SMITH. I mean the world would not consume more than 10,000,000 bales—that statement will be found in the press—which would leave a surplus, not the ordinary carryover but a surplus, out of that crop of 6,000,000 bales. But when all the confusion had passed, and the facts were ascertained, there were consumed 14,800,000 bales of American cotton during that cotton year from August 1 to August 1.

Mr. WATSON. What year was that?

Mr. SMITH. From August 1, 1914, to August 1, 1915.

Mr. WATSON. When were the exchanges closed?

Mr. SMITH. They were closed along about the 1st of August.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think they opened about the 1st of November.

Mr. SMITH. They closed just after the World War began; I do not remember the exact date, but they closed for a good long time.

Mr. RANSDELL. The exchanges began to close about the 1st of August and remained closed for about three months, as I recall.

Mr. SMITH. It was something like that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will consult the figures, I think he will find that at the time the exchange closed the estimate of the cotton crop was under 13,000,000 bales. The enormous crop of that year, like the enormous crop of this year, was the result of the heavy late production. I am sure that if the Senator will look at the figures, he will find that cotton was selling around 15 or 16 cents when the war broke out, because the estimate of the crop was rather low, but they increased the estimate of actual production because of a large late crop.

Mr. SMITH. I do not recall.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think, if the Senator will look at the figures, he will find that to be the case.

Mr. SMITH. I will take advantage of an opportunity of doing that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator know—and then I am not going to interrupt him any further—that the exchanges closed because they became afraid of a market that they could not either guess or control?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think they could find sale for any contract, and I do not think that the actual cotton could find any sale. They could hardly sell any cotton on the local market. I think the Senator from North Carolina will bear me out in that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is not this the truth about that situation? We produce 70 per cent of the cotton of the world, and we sell probably two-thirds of what we produce.

Mr. SMITH. No; we sell about 60 per cent of our production.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, somewhere around two-thirds; 60 per cent, we will say. Every cotton exchange or grain exchange or any kind of exchange depends upon the continuance of normal market conditions. That is the basis upon which prices are necessarily fixed. It not only takes into consideration the American market, the domestic market, but the world market. It is based upon that. The result of the war was to stop the flow of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. Everybody quit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. The result was to stop the flow of cotton from one country to the other, and that destroyed the basis upon which prices are fixed on the exchanges.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I said that I had something here from the press. Let me read one or two of these quotations. This is from The Cotton and Cotton Oil News of Dallas, September 7, 1914:

> The closing of the futures market has certainly eliminated the speculator or "gambler," as some are pleased to term the trader in cotton futures.

Some Congressmen and some agitators among southern cotton growers have long demanded that the speculator be eliminated. Well he has been eliminated, boots, breeches, and all. The exchanges have been closed, another demand of said agitators.

According to the claims and promises of these great reformers, the southern cotton grower should now be reaping his profits. The mills would be buying direct from the farmers and paying the latter the big margins that erstwhile went to the exchanges and the gamblers, so called. But what do we see?

Even a blind man can see that the closing of the exchanges and the elimination of speculators have closed the cotton markets and have put the cotton grower entirely at the mercy of a few spot buyers for the mills. The cotton grower is forced to accept any price offered him.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator believe that?

Mr. RANSDELL. Pardon me, I did not interrupt the Senator when he was in the midst of reading a passage like that. I will answer him when I get through, and not before.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is all right; the Senator is not going to answer that at all.

Mr. RANSDELL. The cotton grower is forced to accept any price offered him. He has not the benefit of the bulls and bears which the Senator from North Carolina just described, one pushing up and the other pulling down.

The cotton mills are also handicapped, since they can not go into the open market and buy cotton for future delivery by putting up a margin of about $5 per bale in cash, one-tenth of the value of cotton.

Senators will realize what it was then worth—around $50 a bale.

Now that he is required to pay cash this buying power is paralyzed, and he only purchases one-tenth the quantity of cotton he was able to buy when the exchanges were opened and future trading possible.

Under these conditions there is no wonder that cotton has declined and keeps declining.

Our reformer friends among the farmers have simply been forced to take the physic they have been so long prescribing, and it certainly should make them sick of silly leaders and quack nostrums.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas, if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask the Senator if he believes that the closing of the exchanges broke the price of cotton?

Mr. RANSDELL. I believe their closing had a very material effect; I believe the price fell lower than it would otherwise have fallen. I also believe, and so does every sane man, that the awful chaos brought about by the World War, and perhaps the closing of many mills in France, in Germany, in England, and in other countries that consumed a large part of our cotton was a factor and had great influence in putting the price down.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator say that he does or does not believe that if the exchanges had kept open the price of cotton would have stayed up?

Mr. RANSDELL. I believe the price would have been better than it was had they kept open.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did they close?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not tell the Senator, except for the chaos resulting from the World War, which interfered with all kinds of business.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, they could not control the market?

Mr. RANSDELL. They do not control the market. That is a statement which the Senator has made again and again, but the exchanges do not control the market. It is the people who deal on the exchanges——

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course—the gamblers.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not the gamblers. A great part——

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. One moment—a great part of the business carried on by the exchange is legitimate, and it was so testified last year before the subcommittee of which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was chairman. I think the Senator from Arkansas was there. Mr. Marsh, who was for a long time president of the New York Cotton Exchange, so testified. He said that from 80 to 85 per cent of the business on the exchanges is legitimate hedging business.

Mr. Will Clayton, of Texas, the largest cotton dealer in America, a man who was on trial at that time, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] knows, under the accusation of this very man, Mr. Marsh, said that he thought the estimate of Mr. Marsh was a little high; that he thought it was not as much as 80 to 85 per cent of the transactions that were perfectly legitimate trading, but legitimate trading certainly ran as much as 60 per cent. Would you call a thing "gambling" that is 60 per cent of the whole? Sixty per cent of that business is legitimate insurance, legitimate hedging. It is the only kind of insurance they have.

Now I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Louisiana, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question purely for information.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not an expert.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator has said that the exchanges were closed because of the interruption of the normal flow of the business. They opened in three months. Had the normal flow of business been so restored in three months that they were able to resume? Had normal conditions been restored to that extent in three months?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know myself the real cause of the change. I was suggesting that that was the cause; but I think, in answer to the question of the Senator, that there was a momentary absolute dislocation of that interchange of products upon which the prices that are fixed in the exchange depend; and while that condition exists there could be no operation on the part of the exchanges, because the basis upon which they act had disappeared.

Now, I do not agree with the Senator——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, just let me make this statement in reference to the reason why the exchanges opened at the end of the three months. I should like to have this go into the RECORD, and if it is not absolutely correct I will look it up and correct it.

I think this country had some sort of a meeting and understanding—perhaps through our Government—with certain of the countries of Europe touching this and other matters; and when the condition had been gone over by them so that they might understand to what extent the trading could go on, then the market opened.

Mr. WATSON. I was just wondering about that. That is to say, they were closed by voluntary action?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. They were opened, then, as a result of some sort of governmental understanding?

Mr. SMITH. Some sort of governmental understanding amongst the countries.

Mr. SIMMONS. The restoration of the channels of commerce——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, does the Senator say the exchanges were opened as the result of a governmental understanding?

Mr. RANSDELL. Pardon me; the Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply saying that I know the exchanges probably temporarily closed because the world conditions were such that there could not be that normal flow of commerce upon which prices on the exchange are based.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator is right in that.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I do not think the closing of the exchanges resulted in that tremendous slump in the price of cotton.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not say that it did.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the cause of that was the fact that we were unable to export. We had such a tremendous surplus that the supply was so greatly in excess of the demand that the slump naturally ocurred in response to the law of supply and demand.

Mr. RANSDELL. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. As soon as the channels were opened and we could dispose of the 70 per cent that we sell to the rest of the world, prices began to revive again.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator has stated that correctly; and the point I tried to make was that the closing of the exchanges did cause cotton to drop more than it would have dropped had they been kept open.

In verification of that I have been talking about what the papers said when the exchanges were closed, but here are the documents. Some of you are lawyers, and you like to hear contemporaneous statements from the press. Let me read briefly from the Wichita Falls, Tex., paper of September 8. It is very brief:

The directors of the chamber of commerce to-day telegraphed a request to the presidents of the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges urging that steps be taken at once for reopening business.

Mr. SMITH. Who was it that gave that order?

Mr. RANSDELL (reading):

The directors of the chamber of commerce—

This is from Wichita Falls, Tex.—

to-day telegraphed a request to the presidents of the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges, urging that steps be taken at once for reopening business. The directors expressed belief that renewal—that renewal of the speculative interests will result in higher prices for cotton.

I wish the Senator from North Carolina would listen to this—

That was September 8, Mr. President; and it is a fact that as soon as the exchanges did open, and business began to move, prices gradually went up—not a great deal. The Senator has stated a large part of the cause. It was the interruption of world business. It was putting out of the market those great customers of ours in Europe who took so much of our cotton. That was a large part of the cause of the failure.

I have another one here from the Mobile (Ala.) Register. This is September 9, 1914. Referring to the action of the committees at New York in trying to effect a settlement of contracts made before the war the cotton market report in the Mobile Register of September 9 says:

If a settlement of these contracts will open the way for the resumption of business by the exchanges, it is a consummation devoutly to be wished, as ever since the exchange closed shippers, brokers, manufacturers, as well as everyone else in any way interested in cotton, have all been at sea as to what cotton is worth.

Nobody knows what cotton is worth unless there be some place in the United States where there is buying and selling going on, and the prices of the sales and of the purchases are registered and telegraphed throughout the world.

Mr. BROOKHART rose.

Mr. RANSDELL. Just one moment and I will yield.

The lack of a broad central market resulted in an irregularity in prices such as the trade has never witnessed.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the Senator says that they know nothing about the price of cotton except as these sales are recorded. That is the exact complaint the cotton farmers have been making all the time. Their cost of production, which ought to determine their price, is not considered at all in making these prices. The cost of production plus a margin of profit of some kind, is the basis of price in almost everything else that is sold; and yet under this system the farmers must be left to take whatever price, for instance, speculators figure out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right. The price ought to be based upon supply and demand; and if this country, in any year when there is not an excessive carry-over, produces only enough for its own use and what the world demands from it, the price of cotton in this country is very satisfactory as a rule; but when this country produces largely in excess of what it needs itself and the balance of the world demands of it, the price of cotton is low, and always will be low.

Mr. BROOKHART. I can not agree with the last conclusion of the Senator. I think if we properly finance and hold that surplus of cotton, instead of turning it over to the speculator, we can regulate the price.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is another question. I agree with the Senator about that. The Senator knows I do. I argued that very strenuously when we were considering the McNary-Haugen bill. If we could just take that surplus off the market in a fat year, so to speak, and hold it until we had a lean year, then we might be able to regulate and control the price of cotton.

Mr. BROOKHART. The only use these speculators make of the surplus is to beat down the price.

Mr. RANSDELL. Do not some of them beat it up? Did you ever know of a seller when there was not a buyer? Did you ever know of a buyer without a seller? Ah, my friend, you must be fair now. The price of cotton is just as often put up by speculation as it is put down by speculation.

Mr. GLASS. Then, Mr. President, whether it go down or whether it go up, the people that get beaten up are the consumers.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Iowa has touched on the crux of this whole matter. The agricultural interests of this country have no bargaining power. The farmer has to dispose of his product within from 30 to 90 days, because the obligations assumed in its production mature at that time. He has no resources, no reserve fund, and he has to dispose of it. If there is nobody to buy it but the party who is going to purchase and convert it, the producer then is entirely at the mercy of that individual; but under the system now existing, in view of his helplessness, there is a friend—a quasi friend or a real friend—in the form of the man who believes that the intrinsic value of the thing warrants him in buying it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; but that man, when he comes to buy it, wants it as cheaply as possible, and he beats down the market, and then he holds is for a higher market. He is the speculator.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator must understand that it is not a question with him as to the initial price he gives. It is a question of what is going to be the response as he buys it up to its intrinsic value. Otherwise, what would you have? You would have the disorganized, unresourceful, poverty-stricken producers absolutely tied to the party whose very nature is that he is a bear, trying to buy the product just as low as he can, convert it, and sell it as high as he can.

I am not standing here with any brief for a speculative market.

Mr. BROOKHART. The miller will not buy the product if he does not need it. The speculator buys it on the theory that he will sell it to the miller later at a bigger price.

Mr. SMITH. Precisely.

Mr. BROOKHART. In buying that product from the farmer, the speculator's interest is in beating the farmer's price down just as low as he can.

Mr. SMITH. Well, what would the miller's price be?

Mr. BROOKHART. And he has a better chance to get a low price than the miller.

Mr. SMITH. Let us not lose sight of the fact that he has to sell. You had a bill here, known as the McNary-Haugen bill——

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; but the lower the price for which he can buy the product, the better chance he has to make a profit when he comes to sell it.

Mr. SMITH. All right; take the Senator's own argument. The farmer now is helpless. He has not a friend. He has to sell. Neither by legislation nor by the economic condition in which he finds himself has he a reserve dollar. The only thing he has is his crop. He has to sell it to meet the obligations that he has entered into, and they mature in a comparatively few days. The aggregate amount that he produces will extend over 12 months. Somebody is going to convert it, and that is the last form of its marketing. If you restrict him to the man who is going to buy it for his use, he can lay in 30 days' supply and then say to the farmer, "Well, there is no market. I do not want any more. I have 30 days' supply."

Let us not lose sight of the fact that until the bargaining power of the agricultural interests of this country is made equal to the bargaining power of those who buy their product, you will have this farm problem. You had a bill here in the form of the McNary-Haugen bill. The fundamental principle of that bill——

Mr. BROOKHART. I had a bill in different form.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; but you had the same principle involved——

Mr. BROOKHART. No.

Mr. SMITH. That you were to finance the farmer. If he does not get sufficient finances to hold his crop and distribute it and absorb the overhead, you will always have this farm problem.

You know and I know that it is not a question of the organization of the great industrial plants that convert cotton into cloth or the great rolling mills that convert wheat into flour. The mere fact that they build these great institutions calls for capital. They lay aside their surplus. They are in a position now to combine themselves and name their price; but every farmer has to sell wherever he can sell. He has no resources. He has nothing back of him, and this system has grown up, and until we can supplant it with a reserve fund for the farmer and put him in a position where in the market place he is on an equality in bargaining power with the people who convert his product, you are going to have this farm problem.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator's explanation does not comport with the facts as I have observed them out in my own State, as to oats, for instance. The Quaker Oats Co. out there has the biggest oat mill in the world, and when I was up in their city last summer—and I think the Senator from Indiana was there at the same time—the price of oats was about 32 cents a bushel on the market, but they were buying their supply. Of course, a few weeks before oats had been 65 to 70 cents a bushel. The new crop came on, and the price went down, so they went in and bought their supply at the low price. One of the managers of the mill said to me that they might just as well have paid 65 to 70 cents to the farmers, but the board of trade market came along and beat the price down, and they would buy their supply while they could get it at the low price. They sold it the year around to the consumers as though it had cost them the 65 or 70 cents. That is the way it works out as to oats.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is answering his own argument.

Mr. BROOKHART. I can not see any difference in results in the case of cotton; when the speculator beats the price down, the miller could go out and buy at the low figure.

Mr. SMITH. If the speculator were not there, the miller could beat it down.

Mr. BROOKHART. He would not be as expert.

Mr. SMITH. He would have all the power he wanted, because he would be the only purchaser. If he goes in and buys only when the speculator beats it down, if the speculator is removed he will buy it at the price that suits him. That is the very point. The Senator answers his own argument when he said that there was a time when it was higher than that at which they bought. Some farmers sold at that high price.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; no farmer did. The farmers do not get the high prices. The high price is the speculator's price.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, Mr. President, what is the use——

Mr. BROOKHART. Let us take 1916. The farmers got $1.51 a bushel for their wheat, on the average in 1916; but the speculator got as high at $3.25 a bushel at Chicago.

Mr. SMITH. Not as an average.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is the reason why President Wilson organized the wheat corporation.

Mr. SMITH. He did not get that as an average.

Mr. BROOKHART. They got far above $1.51, on an average. The price to the consumers was based largely on the price of $3.25 a bushel.

Mr. SMITH. Just as many farmers had the opportunity to sell at $3.25 as had the opportunity to sell at $1.50.

Mr. BROOKHART. No. The Senator has explained that. The farmer must sell, it is true, in 30, 60, or 90 days. The bank calls him, and he must sell; he has no choice. That is when the price is always low. The speculators are always holding him down, because that is when they can buy their supply and hold it for the better market later. That is what happened in 1916. The speculators got wheat for an average of $1.51, and after they got it—the next spring, before the new crop came in—it was $3.25.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Arkansas, all of us know—and I will bring in the cotton reports of 30 years to prove—that it is not always true that cotton is lowest during that selling period.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is not that usually the case?

Mr. SMITH. No; I can not say that it is. Take this year, for instance.

Mr. BROOKHART. I concede it is not always true, but it is usually the case.

Mr. SMITH. Let us take this year, if the Senator from Louisiana will allow me.

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield further; but I would like to say right there that I have always found that I could get a better price for my cotton if I rushed in and sold it quickly. The price is higher at the beginning than later.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is true because speculators have not yet gotten in their work of beating down the price.

Mr. SMITH. Let me state what has occurred this year: When the market opened, it opened at least $10 to $15 a bale higher than it is right now; and during the rush period—that is, when the small fellow has to sell—it was anywhere from $5 to $10 a bale higher than it is now, showing that the outlook for the crop has something to do with the price. But the speculator, the man who sees the value of the product, believes that intrinsically it is worth more than it is bringing, and during that selling period the farmer gets the advantage of whatever those who are trying to get a higher value may have done.

I do not want to be put in the attitude and I am not going to be put in the attitude of standing here and trying to defend gambling or speculation in farm products, but I am here to say that until we do get this country to realize that there must be something done for agriculture in the way of giving it a reserve fund to enable it to market its own products, we are going to have this farm problem, and we are bound to have it. It is the inequality of bargaining power that makes the farmer the victim of those who go into the market place.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am considerably in accord with that idea of the Senator. I have raised cotton down in Texas myself, and I never struck a year like the one the Senator has been describing just now. They were always the other way. So far as getting a reserve fund is concerned, I think we have to convince the country first that this gambling system of handling our products is wrong. Then I think we will get a farm bill that will really result in some method of handling the surplus.

Mr. SMITH. It is not worth our while to go afield and select out a certain group of men and brand them with an epithet and lay upon them the sin of manipulating the market. The Senator knows, and I know, that there is no speculative market in cottonseed. That is a by-product of cotton. Fifty-eight standard commercial articles are made from cottonseed alone. Yet a certain group of cottonseed mills, or crushers, or refiners of the oil, own all the processes. There is no market for it outside of them. We are selling our cottonseed by the ton for just about what would be given for the meal that comes out of a ton.

Mr. RANSDELL. Whatever the purchasers are willing to pay?

Mr. SMITH. Whatever they are willing to pay.

Mr. BROOKHART. We are using a good deal of it, and we are paying a high price.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if cottonseed is not selling really at a lower price, in proportion to the demand for it or for the products that are made out of it, than cotton itself?

Mr. SMITH. Infinitely lower.

Mr. BROOKHART. They are working your cottonseed just as they are working our oats up north.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but the charge is that the speculator is ruining the cotton market. There is no speculation in cottonseed. The refiners who finally use them put the price down to where it suits them.

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me, from the description the Senator has given, that the refiner is both a speculator and a refiner.

Mr. SMITH. I do not care what name you may call him.

Mr. RANSDELL. Suppose the Senator lets me go ahead now.

Mr. SMITH. Just let me finish this sentence, and then I will speak in my own time.

Since we are discussing the cottonseed proposition, I may say that there is no cattle food, as the Senator knows, equivalent to cottonseed cake. There is not a fertilizer that is superior to cottonseed meal. No better butter ever came from Elgin than the butter made from cottonseed. No better salad oil comes from olives than comes from the refined cottonseed oil. No better lard ever came from a hog than is made from cottonseed. All the medicated cotton comes from the little fiber taken from the long fiber that is taken off, and yet, in spite of all these world-wide necessities that come from cottonseed, they actually sell at less than the hulls and the meal, after the oil is expressed, will bring in the open market. There is no speculation. The poor, disorganized farmer is in the grip of an organization that takes three-fourths of the value of his stuff, and the relative value of the cottonseed is infinitely lower than the relative value of cotton.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am ready to proceed now.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I ask one question?

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator wish to ask me a question, or ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator to say that the fighting of the bears and the bulls raises the price of cotton?

Mr. RANSDELL. I said that sometimes it contributes to raise and sometimes it lowers it. I said that there is never a buyer without a seller, and never a seller without a buyer. It is the conflict of the two that makes the market.

Mr. HARRIS. The bears would stop fighting if they could not run down the price of cotton. They would not stay in the market if they simply raised the price.

Mr. BROOKHART. Did not the Senator say that 85 per cent of the so-called selling and buying is pure fiction?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; exactly the reverse. The Senator was not listening. I quoted from Mr. Marsh, showing that 80 to 85 per cent of all the trades in the New Orleans market and the New York market were perfectly legitimate hedging transactions.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to have a little more information about that hedging business. Who does this hedging?

Mr. RANSDELL. Anyone who wants to hedge.

Mr. BROOKHART. Anyone who has bought cotton will go and sell it as a hedge?

Mr. RANSDELL. Suppose I raise some cotton, as I do in Louisiana, and have a hundred bales I wish to sell. I go to Lake Providence, my home town, to a buyer—there are usually half a dozen or so there—and one of them will make me a better price than anyone else. Let us say he offers 20 cents middling and buys my cotton. In order to insure that the cotton is going to be worth 20 cents middling when he delivers it, he will sell that hundred bales at 20 cents.

Mr. BROOKHART. To whom does he sell?

Mr. RANSDELL. He goes on the exchange and sells it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Who buys it?

Mr. RANSDELL. Somebody is buying, perhaps a speculator, if you please, perhaps a man who is not a speculator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I know the case of a farmer up in my town who hedged to the extent of $50,000, and when he came to collect his money the fellow was broke.

Mr. RANSDELL. If he had dealt on the New York Exchange or the New Orleans Exchange, let me say to the Senator that he would not have lost a copper, because those are perfectly responsible business organizations, and the trades made there are protected by them.

Mr. BROOKHART. He was dealing on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not so familiar with the board of trade, but understand it is a thoroughly reliable institution. Now, I want to read just two or three more of these articles.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, the Senator said a "responsible" organization. He did not mean respectable?

Mr. RANSDELL. I said responsible. The Senator can put in any adjective he desires. I have some mighty good friends on those exchanges, and I will say to the Senator that they are just as respectable men as there are in Louisiana or in any other State in the Union.

Mr. BLEASE. That may be, but I never heard of any before that were respectable.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is not acquainted with the Louisiana Exchange, then.

Now, I wish to read a few of these reports from the papers contemporary with the closing of the exchanges in 1914. I am not going to get away from that subject, because it is an actual historic occurrence, when the very thing happened which the Senator from Arkansas is trying to make happen again, and I want to show how it would work out.

I will read now from the Atlanta Constitution, which we will all admit is a great paper. This is dated September 12, 1914.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will not the Senator let me read two or three of these, and then I will be delighted to yield?

This is dated September 12, 1914, and reads:

The chamber of commerce committee on ways and means to meet the cotton situation has taken steps to cut down the 1915 crop and materially improve the market for the present year's output. The committee also adopted a resolution urging the New York, New Orleans, and Liverpool Cotton Exchanges to open, so a definite market price may be fixed on spot cotton for the benefit of the immediate market.

I now read from the New York Herald of October 2, 1914:

Southern planters who in the past have been working for the abolition of the cotton exchanges as mere instruments for the cheapening of their product for the benefit of speculators—

The very arguments that are made here now—have received an important lesson during the two months since these institutions were compelled to suspend operations. The importance of the stock exchanges in providing a perpetual market for securities and in fixing values through the open competition of buyers and sellers has been impressed upon the country during the protracted period of suspension.

Now from the New York Sun of October 19, 1914, I read the following:

As Mr. McAdoo says: "What cotton wants is a restored market. The direct road to a solution of the cotton problem lies through the reopening of the cotton exchanges, which will give both growers and spinners a future market to deal in, and the future market will offer the surest and safest way of caring for the 1914 surplus cotton."

Continuing:

"The reopening of the exchanges will conserve all equities, not of the cotton grower alone, but of the spinner, the cotton-goods merchant, and the retail buyer, in a manner impossible by all of the other devious methods proposed, for the world will then have again a natural cotton market regulated by economic law."

Then from the Textile Manufacturers' Journal of October 24, 1914:

The opening of the cotton exchange, it is believed, will exert a bullish influence—

I suppose Senators know what that means—putting the price up—on raw cotton, as there is bound to be a large amount of buying of hedges and for speculation. A futures market will afford mills a basis for contract work and will give advance offers a safer standing.

Continuing—and if Senators will listen just a few minutes longer I shall be through—I do not wish to have Senators agree with what I happen to say on the subject or what my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] or any other friend of the bill may say, but it does seem to me they can pay a great deal of attention to what is said by the Secretaries of Agriculture of the country. Let me say without reading from all of them, that they have been a unit in opposing legislation of this kind.

I read briefly from the report of Mr. Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], dated January 25, 1924:

During the past 50 years, many bills have been introduced in Congress which would prohibit the sale or purchase of contracts for the future delivery of grain or cotton not providing for the actual delivery thereof. None of these drastice bills passed, because evidently Congress reached the conclusion that such legislation would substantially impair, if it would not actually destroy, the valuable hedging facility which is furnished by the making of the vast number of contracts on and through the exchanges in which deliveries are contemplated rather than actually assured. In rejecting these bills, it seems that Congress wisely refused to deprive the producers, the merchants, and the manufacturers of these farm products of the benefit of this insurance against price fluctuation. However, congressional study of the subject matter led to the passage of laws designed to regulate and supervise future trading in cotton and grain for the purpose of eliminating excessive speculation, market manipulation, dissemination of false information, and other known injurious practices which attended the operation of exchanges in the conduct of their business in future trading. The legislative thought on this subject crystallized into the cotton futures and the grain futures act.

Since the passage of the cotton futures act in 1914, its reenactment in 1916, and its amendment in 1919, it may fairly be claimed that the quotations for cotton have more accurately reflected the value of spot cotton than was previously the case. As the future quotations have functioned on the value of spot cotton, the market has offered a better opportunity for the making of hedges than was previously the case when futures sold at a much larger discount compared with spots. The requirement which the act makes of settlement on ascertained commercial differences rather than on arbitrary differences which were fixed by the exchange rules has resulted in settlements of such contracts which are much fairer to the buyer. Since ascertainment of commercial differences and the classification of cotton by the department, there has been much less opportunity for unfair manipulation of the future market by powerful traders. Practically all interests directly concerned in future trading in cotton agree that the law has been of great benefit, and many of those which formerly strenuously opposed the enactment of the law have accepted it and are operating under it without complaint.

The grain futures act of September 21, 1922, comprehensively places under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture the exchange whereon there is future trading in grain. It prohibits the dissemination by an exchange of any of its members of false, misleading, or inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of commodities, and prohibits manipulation of prices or the cornering of grain by the dealers or operators on the exchanges.

In conclusion Secretary Wallace said:

Therefore I am inclined to believe that Congress should give the grain futures act and also the cotton futures act more time to demonstrate their worth before it resorts to far-reaching legislation proposed by S. 626, because I am convinced that the insurance facility is of great value and is largely dependent for its existence upon public speculation in grain and cotton contracts.

I hope Senators who are opposed to the measure will listen to that. Mr. Wallace said that the insurance facility is—largely dependent for its existence for public speculation in grain and cotton contracts, and this hedging privilege should not be destroyed until—

Until when? Listen to this Senators—until these industries find some better way to insure themselves against price fluctuations.

What better way has been brought forward by the proponents of the measure? What means is suggested to take its place? It is destruction, Senators, but not construction. It seeks to pull down the temple over our heads, but does not suggest any means of building another temple.

Let me read just a few words from the report of Mr. Jardine, the present Secretary of Agriculture, dated January 13, 1926, in which he said:

From time to time a great many bills have been introduced to prohibit the purchase and sale of contracts for the future delivery of agricultural products not providing for actual delivery thereof. Congress, however, evidently concluded that such legislation would impair or destroy the hedging facilities—

Listen to that, Senators—the hedging facilities, the insurance facilities—which are furnished through trading on the exchanges, and thus far it has refused to deprive the producers, merchants, and manufacturers of these farm products of the benefit of such insurance against price fluctuations.

Study of the subject matter, however, has led to the passage of laws providing for the regulation and supervision of future trading in cotton and grain for the purpose of eliminating undue speculation and other injurious practices which had crept into the business of future trading.

Mr. BROOKHART. That was Secretary Wallace's report?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; that is Secretary Jardine's report.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is worse yet.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is secretary of the party which has honored the Senator from Iowa so much. It seems to me Secretary Jardine is a very fine man. I think he is all right, even if the Senator from Iowa does not. He is certainly disinterested in this matter.

Mr. BROOKHART. I remember discussing that proposition with Secretary Wallace and I said to him——

Mr. RANSDELL. Secretary Wallace is not here to talk about it for himself, and I have read what he said.

Mr. BROOKHART. I said I thought the so-called hedging was the most insidious form of speculation we had under the respectable name of insurance.

Mr. RANSDELL. That was the Senator's view, but the cold, carefully prepared written opinion of Secretary Wallace was what I have just read.

A few years ago there was a good deal of objection to contracts on the New York and New Orleans exchanges because certain evils had crept in. The matter was investigated very carefully, as I recall, for two or three years. Our colleague the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was in charge of the measure in the Senate and his then colleague in the House, Mr. Asbury Lever, was in charge of it in the House of Representatives. Very great care was taken in the investigation. I do not know how many witnesses were summoned, but surely a great many. Finally a bill was introduced and passed, known as the Smith-Lever bill. I have designated it on the floor of the Senate as one of the great pieces of constructive legislation of the last 50 years and I have no apology to make for the statement.

I think it was a great piece of legislation. It became a law finally in 1916 and is on the statute books now. Here is what the committee said, among other things, in rendering their wonderfully able report on that measure:

It is the opinion of the committee that the abolition of cotton exchanges would result inevitably in the monopolizing of the entire cotton crop in the hands of a very few powerful interests with the force and means to fix the price at which the farmer would be compelled to sell his cotton. Fully 75 per cent of American-produced cotton leaves the hands of the producer during the four months of September, October, November, and December. It takes no stretch of the imagination to foresee how utterly helpless the farmer, as a class, would be in his present disorganized condition as a factor in fixing the price of his own product, as against the organized genius and money of the spinners and powerful spot-cotton dealers.

Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that this is a very important matter. The measure is seeking to destroy an agency which has existed many years, an agency which in the opinion of a great many thoughtful Americans is operating well. The sponsors of this measure are not trying to correct its evils, if it has any, but to destroy it entirely. That is not the way legislators should act. They should correct evils, if there be any, but should not destroy a great agency of commerce which has existed for more than half a century and the beneficial effect of which is generally recognized.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to submit and will offer at the proper time, as a substitute for the unfinished business, the language now contained in the bill (H. R. 13646) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cotton by regulating transactions on cotton-futures exchanges, and for other purposes, which passed the House on January 21, 1929, having been introduced by Congressman VINSON of Georgia. In the language of H. R. 13646 I have already made some changes.

I desire now to say that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has a bill which has been favorably reported and is on the calendar, which in many respects is identical with the Vinson bill, H. R. 13646. If the Senator from South Carolina should wish to amend my substitute by making it conform to his bill, which has already had a favorable report from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I should have no objection.

I now ask that the substitute which I submit, and which I shall at the proper time offer, may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate, again calling attention to the fact that I have made some changes in the bill as it passed the House, and that I reserve the right to perfect my substitute by further amendment before the vote is reached upon it.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

That this act shall be known by the short title of the "Cotton futures trading act."

(a) For the purposes of this act "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. The word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts. The word "cotton" shall be construed to mean lint cotton in bales. The term "future delivery," as herein used, shall not include sale of cash or spot cotton for deferred shipment or delivery. The words "cotton-futures exchange" shall be held to include and mean any exchange, association, or board of trade, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling cotton or receiving the same for sale on consignment. The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust within the scope of his employment or office shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust as well as of such official, agent, or other person. The words "interstate commerce" shall be construed to mean commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof, or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof, or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia.

(b) For the purpose of this act (but not in anywise limiting the foregoing definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect to any cotton shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such cotton is part of that current of commerce usual in the cotton trade whereby cotton is sent from one State with the expectation that it will end its transit, after purchase, in another, including, in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State, or for manufacture within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such manufacture. Cotton normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nation.

SEC. 2. Transactions in cotton involving the sale thereof for future delivery as commonly conducted on cotton-futures exchanges and known as "futures" are affected with a national public interest; that such transactions are carried on in large volume by the public generally and by persons engaged in the business of buying and selling cotton in interstate commerce; that the prices involved in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and in foreign countries as a basis for determining the prices to the producer and the consumer of cotton and to facilitate the movements thereof in interstate commerce; that such transactions are utilized by shippers, dealers, manufacturers, and others engaged in handling cotton in interstate commerce as a means of hedging themselves against possible loss through fluctuations in price; that the transactions and prices of cotton on such cotton-futures exchanges are susceptible to speculation, manipulation, and control, and sudden or unreasonable fluctuations in the prices thereof frequently occur as a result of such speculation, manipulation, or control, which are detrimental to the producer or the consumer and the persons handling cotton in interstate commerce, and that such fluctuations in price are an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce in cotton and render regulation imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public interest therein.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce, by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication, any offer to make or execute, or any confirmation of the execution of, or any quotation or report of the price of, any contract of sale of cotton for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any cotton-futures exchange in the United States, or for any person to make or execute such contract of sale, which is or may be used for (1) hedging any transaction in interstate commerce in cotton, or (2) determining the price basis of any such transaction in interstate commerce, or (3) delivering cotton sold, shipped, or received in interstate commerce for the fulfillment thereof, except: (a) Where the seller is at the time of the making of such contract the owner of the actual physical property covered thereby, or is the grower thereof, or in case either party to the contract is the owner or renter of land on which the same is to be grown, or is an association of such owners or growers of cotton or of such owners or renters of land; or (b) where such contract is made by or through a member of a cotton-futures exchange which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," as hereinafter provided, and if such contract is evidenced by a record in writing, which shows the date, the parties to such contract and their addresses, the property covered and its price, and the terms of delivery and otherwise comply with section 5, 7, or 11 of this act: Provided, That each exchange member shall keep such record for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of any duly authorized representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate any cotton-futures exchange as a "contract market" when, and only when, such cotton-futures exchange complies with and carries out the following conditions and requirements:

(a) When the governing board thereof provides for the making and filing by the exchange or any member thereof, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, of reports in accordance with the rules and regulations, and in such manner and form and at such times as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into by the exchange, or the members thereof, either in cash or spot transactions consummated at, on, or in such exchange, or transactions for future delivery, and when such governing board provides, in accordance with such rules and regulations, for the keeping of a record by the exchange or the members of such exchange, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, showing the details and terms of all cash or spot and future transactions entered into by them, consummated at, on, or in a cotton-futures exchange, such record to be in permanent form, showing the parties to all such transactions, including the persons for whom made, any assignments or transfers thereof, with the parties thereto, and the manner in which said transactions are fulfilled, discharged, or terminated. Such record shall be required to be kept for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any duly authorized representative of the United States Department of Agriculture or the United States Department of Justice.

(b) When the governing board thereof provides for the prevention of dissemination by such exchange or any member thereof, or any person using the facilities thereof, of false or misleading or knowingly inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cotton in interstate commerce.

(c) When the governing board thereof provides for prevention of manipulation of prices or the cornering of any cotton by the dealers or operators upon such exchange.

(d) When the governing board thereof does not exclude from membership in, and all privileges on, such cotton futures exchange, any duly authorized representative of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative association of producers having adequate financial responsibility which is engaged in spot or cash cotton business, or any duly authorized representative of any organization acting for a group of such cooperative associations of producers, if such association or associations have complied, and agree to comply, with such terms and conditions as are or may be imposed lawfully on other members of such exchange: Provided, That no rule of a contract market shall forbid or be construed to forbid the return on a patronage basis by any such cooperative association to its bona fide members of moneys collected in excess of the expense of conducting the business of such association.

(e) When the governing board provides for making effective the final orders or decisions entered pursuant to the provisions of paragraph B of section 12 of this act.

(f) When the governing board thereof provides that members of such exchange shall require that any nonmember filing for execution an order for the purchase or sale of cotton futures shall comply with all the requirements and regulations applicable to members of such exchange.

(g) When the governing board thereof provides that the futures contracts traded in on such exchange shall name as places of delivery of the cotton covered by such contracts not less than two and not more than six bona fide spot cotton markets, designated as such by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, which designation by the Secretary of Agriculture shall include Charleston, S. C., Norfolk, Va., Savannah, Ga., New Orleans, La., Houston, Tex., Augusta, Ga., Dallas, Tex., Memphis, Tenn., Little Rock, Ark., and Galveston, Tex., and such other places as he may from time to time deem advisable; and shall further provide that the cotton delivered on each contract must be delivered in its entirety in one storage place; and shall further provide that notice by the seller of intention to deliver must be issued not less than 10 days prior to the date of delivery, and must specify the place of delivery and the grade and staple of the cotton to be delivered on such contract; and shall further provide that any cotton contract market located on the Atlantic coast shall have among its delivery points at least two Atlantic ports named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets; also provided that any cotton contract market located on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico shall have among its delivery points at least two ports on the Gulf of Mexico named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets: Provided, That any cotton contract market located in the interior shall have among its delivery points at least two ports either on the Atlantic coast or the Gulf of Mexico named as delivery points, which ports shall be designated spot markets.

For the purposes of this act the word "manipulation" shall be construed to mean, among other things:

(1) Shipping or transferring to any contract market any cotton for the purpose of delivery on such contract market at an obvious loss on the transaction for the purpose of artificially influencing prices.

The purchase in one contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and a corresponding sale in the same contract market of a like number of bales of cotton for delivery in a later month, accompanied by the receipt of any cotton on the purchase and the tender of the same or other cotton on the sale, when such transaction is done at an obvious loss, for the purpose and with the effect of artificially influencing the price relationship of the two months.

(2) Tendering and repeatedly retendering on futures contracts in any designated contract market notices of delivery of the same cotton for the purpose of artificially influencing prices upon such contract market.

(3) The tender upon futures contracts more than once by the same person in the same calendar month of notices of delivery of the same cotton, or otherwise trafficking in notices of delivery for the purpose of artificially influencing prices.

(4) Engaging in straddle operations in and between various markets designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as contract markets with the apparent purpose of artificially influencing the movement of prices in any such designated contract market.

For the purposes of this section a straddle shall be understood to mean the purchase in one contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and a corresponding sale in the same or another contract market of a like number of bales for delivery in another month, or the purchase in one designated contract market of a given number of bales of cotton for delivery in one month and the sale in another designated market of a like number of bales for delivery in the same month.

The foregoing definitions of manipulation shall not be held to exclude from the operations of this act other forms of manipulation not herein specifically described.

SEC. 5. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery under this section shall:

First. Be in writing plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract, and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved, without giving the weight, each bale shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section and no other grade or grades.

Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract, the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the average actual commercial differences, determined as hereinafter provided.

Fifth. Provide that cotton that because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character, or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of low middling, or cotton that if white is below the grade of low middling, or if extra white, cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or if yellow tinged, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, or if yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling, or if spotted, cotton that is below the grade of middling, or if light yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling, or if gray, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is blue stained according to said official standards, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is not of sound staple character, or cotton that is irregular, weak, and wasty, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed" shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that, on the tenth business day prior to delivery, the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that, on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade: Provided, That where any cotton to which any such notice of the date of delivery shall apply shall have been previously certificated, such notice of the date of delivery shall state the total number of bales of each grade and staple to be delivered.

Seventh. Provide that all tenders of cotton and settlements therefor under such contract shall be in accordance with the classification thereof made under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture by such officer or officers of the Government as shall be designated for the purpose, and the costs of such classification shall be fixed, assessed, collected, and paid as provided in such regulations. Samples representing cotton classified and certificated by such officers for the purposes of this section shall be made available for examination to any person, whether he be a member or a nonmember of a cotton futures exchange, upon the payment of such fees and upon compliance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. All moneys collected as costs hereunder may be used as a revolving fund for carrying out the purposes of this subdivision.

The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 5."

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section, and the certificates of the officers of the Government as to the classification of any cotton for the purposes of said subdivision shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between the parties to such contract, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true classification of the cotton involved.

SEC. 6. (a) That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton of grades above or below the basis grade in settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton, shall be, for each grade, the average of the actual commercial differences in the spot markets of not less than five places designated from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as determined and quoted in each such market from actual sales of spot cotton, or, in the absence of actual sales of spot cotton, from bona fide bid and offered prices, upon the eleventh business day prior to the date fixed in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5 for delivery of cotton on the contract: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets shall be based upon the official cotton standards established by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for the determination of the actual commercial differences and the actual commercial staple premiums and discounts in the spot markets in the places designated by him, and for the publication of the quotations thereof. Whenever the Secretary shall find that, in any such spot market, the quotations of such differences, or of staple premiums or discounts, have not been made in accordance with his regulations or do not reflect the actual commercial differences, staple premiums, or discounts, he may, for such period as he shall deem necessary, determine such actual commercial differences, staple premiums, and discounts in any such market, and publish the quotations thereof. The quotations so published shall be deemed the quotations of such market.

(c) Any person who shall fail or refuse to furnish any information in his possession requested by such Secretary under paragraph (b) of this section shall not be heard to complain in respect of any quotation published by such Secretary.

SEC. 7. In case cotton of grade or grades other than the basis grade specified in the contract shall be tendered in performance of any contract under this section, the parties to such contract may agree, at the time of the tender, as to the price of the grade or grades so tendered; and that if they shall not then agree as to such price, then, and in that event, the buyer of said contract shall have the right to demand the specific fulfillment of such contract by the actual delivery of cotton of the basis grade named therein and at the price specified for such basis grade in said contract, and if the contract also comply with all the terms and conditions of section 5 hereof not inconsistent with this section: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any contract in which, or in the settlement of, or in respect to which any device or arrangement whatever is resorted to, or any agreement is made, for the determination or adjustment of the price of the grade or grades tendered other than the basis grade specified in the contract by any "fixed difference" system, or by arbitration, or by any other method not provided for by this act.

Contracts made in compliance with this section shall be known as section 7 contracts. The provisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 7."

Section 11 of this act shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 7 hereof.

SEC. 8. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such, and of which he shall give public notice.

SEC. 9. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets, the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple and of such other grades and staple lengths of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require in regulations prescribed by him in furtherance hereof: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places, in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades and staple lengths for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades and staple lengths established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton, of the same or different grades and staple lengths, in the markets selected and designated by him, from time to time, for that purpose, and in that event, differences in value of cotton of various grades and staple lengths involved in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of any persons engaged in the business of dealing in cotton, when requested by the Secretary of Agriculture or any agent acting under his instructions, to answer correctly to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, all questions touching his knowledge of the number of bales, the classification, the price or bona fide price offered, and other terms of purchase or sale of any cotton involved in any transaction participated in by him, or to produce all books, letters, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any such person who shall, within a reasonable time prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture or such agent, willfully fail or refuse to answer such questions or to produce such books, letters, papers, or documents, or who shall willfully give any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or volume may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, character, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the "official cotton standards of the United States": Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary. Any moneys received for or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of such practical forms and condemned as unsuitable for such use, or with the sale of such practical forms, may be expended for the purchase of other cotton for such use, and for travel and transportation and all other necessary expenses incident thereto.

SEC. 11. All contracts under this section shall comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description, specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of "set-off" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words "Subject to the cotton futures trading act, section 11."

This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

SEC. 12. Any cotton-futures exchange desiring to be designated a "contract market" shall make application to the Secretary of Agriculture for such designation and accompany the same with a showing that it complies with the foregoing conditions, and with a sufficient assurance that it will continue to comply with the said requirements.

(a) A commission composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General is authorized to suspend for a period not to exceed six months, or to revoke the designation of any cotton-futures exchange as a "contract market" upon a showing that such cotton-futures exchange has failed or is failing to comply with any of the above requirements, or is not enforcing its rules of government made a condition of its designation as set forth in section 4. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the cotton-futures exchange and upon a hearing: Provided, That such suspension or revocation shall be final and conclusive unless within 15 days after such suspension or revocation by the said commission such cotton-futures exchange appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the cricuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the order of said commission be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such cotton-futures exchange will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, chairman of said commission, or any member thereof, and the said commission, or any member thereof, and the said commission shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the cotton-futures exchange, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the said commission duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such a court may affirm or set aside the order of the said commission, or may direct it to modify its order. No such order of the said commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the cotton-futures exchange that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such cotton-futures exchange for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of said commission: Provided further, That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall refuse to designate as a contract market any cotton-futures exchange that has made application therefor, then such cotton-futures exchange may appeal from such refusal to the commission described herein, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General of the United States, with the right to appeal as provided for in other cases in this section, the decision on such appeal to be final and binding on all parties interested.

(b) If the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any person is violating any of the provisions of this act, or is attempting to manipulate the market price of any cotton in violation of the provisions of section 4 hereof, or of any of the rules or regulations made pursuant to its requirements, he may serve upon such person a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached or contained therein a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than three days after the service thereof, requiring such person to show cause why an order should not be made directing that all contract markets, until further notice of said commission, refuse all trading privileges thereon to such person. Said hearing may be had in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, before the said commission, or before a referee designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall cause all evidence to be reduced to writing, and forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman of the said commission. That for the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act, the provisions including the penalties of section 12 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, relating to attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of documentary evidence, and the immunity of witnesses, are made applicable to the power, jurisdiction, and authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, the said commission, or said referee in proceedings under this act, and to persons subject to its provisions. Upon evidence received the said commission may require all contract markets to refuse such person all trading privileges thereon for such period as may be specified in said order. Notice of such order shall be sent forthwith by registered mail or delivered to the offending person and to the governing boards of said contract markets. After the issuance of the order by the commission, as aforesaid, the person against whom it is issued may obtain a review of such order or such other equitable relief as to the court may seem just, by filing in the United States circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the petitioner is doing business a written petition, praying that the order of the commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission by delivering such copy to its chairman or to any member thereof, and thereupon the commission shall forthwith certify and file in the court a transcript of the record theretofore made, including evidence received. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, to set aside, or modify the order of the commission; and the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by the weight of the evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. In proceedings under paragraphs (a) and (b) the judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 13. Any cotton-futures exchange that has been designated a contract market in the manner herein provided may have such designation vacated and set aside by giving notice in writing to the Secretary of Agriculture requesting that its designation as a contract market be vacated, which notice shall be served at least 90 days prior to the date named therein as the date when the vacation of designation shall take effect. Upon receipt of such notice the Secretary of Agriculture shall forthwith order the vacation of the designation of such cotton-futures exchange, effective upon the day named in the notice, and shall forthwith send a copy of the notice and his order to all other contract markets. From and after the date upon which the vacation became effective the said cotton-futures exchange can thereafter be designated again a contract market by making application to the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner herein provided for an original application.

SEC. 14. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, the Secretary of Agriculture may make such investigations as he may deem necessary to ascertain the facts regarding any unfair practices or abuses upon, and regarding the general operations of, cotton-futures exchanges whether prior or subsequent to the enactment of this act, and may publish from time to time, in his discretion, the result of such investigation and such statistical information gathered therefrom as he may deem of interest to the public, except data and information which would separately disclose the business transactions of any person and trade secrets or names of customers: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from making or issuing such reports as he may deem necessary relative to the conduct of any cotton-futures exchange or of the transactions of any person found guilty of violating the provisions of this act under the proceedings prescribed in section 12 of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture in any report may include the facts as to any actual transaction. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate marketing conditions of cotton, including supply and demand, cost to the consumer, and handling and transportation charges.

SEC. 15. Further to effectuate the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to prescribe the manner and form in which accounts, records, and memoranda relating to cotton and contracts for the purchase and sale thereof shall be kept, and he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution for the purposes of clearing, settling, or adjusting any such transactions to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and clearly disclose all facts in their possession relating thereto, and thereafter any person who fails to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500.

SEC. 16. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed from time to time, after investigation, to fix, prescribe, and publicly announce the maximum limit of open interest which may be held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations in contracts of purchase or sale of cotton on any contract market for future delivery in any month or in specified months, and it shall thereafter be unlawful for any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations, to acquire or hold such on open interest in excess of the maximum limit so fixed: Provided, That in fixing and prescribing any maximum limit of open interest hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall give due consideration to any recommendation submitted to him by the governing board of such contract market: Provided further, That such limitation of interest shall be for the purpose of preventing the forcing of any month or any futures market out of proper parity with other months, or other futures markets shall not be used for the purpose of arbitrarily limiting the legitimate merchandising operations of any individual, firm, or corporation, or his or its affiliations, and the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time increase or reduce the maximum limit if upon investigation he finds that the interests of the cotton industry will be best served by so doing: Provided further, That no reduction in such limitations shall affect contracts already entered into within the limit theretofore fixed.

SEC. 17. Any person who shall violate the provisions of section 3 or 16 of this act, or who shall fail to evidence any contract mentioned in said section 3 by a record in writing as therein required, or who shall deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, or wireless, or other means of communication false or misleading reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of cotton in interstate commerce, or any person or persons who shall manipulate or attempt to manipulate prices of cotton or who shall corner or attempt to corner any cotton in futures-contract transactions upon any cotton-futures exchange designated as a contract market under this act, or any person who shall knowingly submit to any officer of the United States Department of Agriculture for classification under this act any reginned, repacked, false packed, mixed packed, or water-packed cotton without informing such officer that such cotton is in fact reginned, repacked, false packed, mixed packed, or water packed; or any person who shall interfere with or influence improperly or attempt to influence improperly any person employed in the administration of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 18. No fine or imprisonment shall be imposed for any violation of this act occurring within 60 days following its passage.

SEC. 19. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 20. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said with reference to the Federal Reserve Board and the cotton exchanges. I think if it would be in order it would be a good idea for the Senate to send all bills relative to these matters back to a special committee consisting of Members of the House and the Senate from the cotton-growing States and let them agree among themselves. Possibly if they could do that, the representatives from the other parts of the country might be able to help solve the problem; but so long as the representatives from the Southern States which grow cotton are so wide apart as they are to-day as to what is best in the interest of the cotton farmer, it seems to me that it is going to be rather difficult, indeed, to find a solution.

Personally, I have never dealt in cotton futures; I have never owned any stock in any corporation, except in two newspapers, and I lost what little I had in them, and I was glad of it because I found out that I could not put any confidence in editors. Therefore, I am not in a position to say very much about the cotton situation or how to solve this problem, but I can not see that it will ever be solved by protecting the cotton exchanges which we know for 50 years have absolutely, openly, and boldly been stealing cotton from the cotton farms of this country.

When I say "stealing" I do not mean "foraging." The gamblers and speculators manipulate the market in New York and they manipulate the market at other points to the ruin of the poor man and his wife who grow the cotton. The farmer rises before daylight; his wife cooks the morning meal for him, and his little children; he goes out in the cotton field and works until 12 o'clock, when he returns home and eats his dinner and then hurries back into the cotton patch and works until it is too dark to see how to work. The farmer and his family are the ones who make the cotton; they are the ones on whose work depends the operation of the great machinery in the cotton mills; yet the Congress of the United States has sat here for years and allowed that farmer and his wife and his little children to be robbed by a gang of thieves in New York, and, I suppose, in Louisiana also, as my friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has mentioned Louisiana.

Then, Mr. President, Congress establishes some farm banks, as they are called, and puts them in the hands of a gang that is made up of a worse set of thieves than those in Wall Street. The farm banks were organized to loan money to the farmer, it is said, but they charge him an exorbitant rate of interest; they charge him outrageous attorney's fees, and they charge him to examine the title to his property. They deduct all of that, they take his note for the money, and then when the time comes to make payment if the flood has washed away his crop, or the hail has beaten down his fields, or his crop runs short and he is unable to pay, the United States Government sells his land, drives his wife and little children out of the home and off of the farm, and that is called aiding the farmer! Some of the one-horse farmers, I am sorry to say, have not sense enough as yet to see that they are being robbed, instead of being aided by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he omitted to refer to one provision in the law. The bank not only makes the farmer sign a note and requires him to pay an exorbitant rate of interest and attorney's fees, but compels him also to take stock in the bank.

Mr. BLEASE. I thank my friend for his suggestion. I did overlook that. The bank also makes the farmer take stock in the company operating the bank.

And what do the farm banks do? The officers steal the bank's funds, as they did in Columbia, S. C. They absolutely stole that bank. To-day stock in that bank is selling for less than $30 on the hundred, and is being bought up by three of the richest men in the State of South Carolina, one of them president and owner of several cotton mills. They are buying up the stock of that bank in the city of Columbia at $30 per share, and then talking about suing the poor little fellow who was made to put his money into it, in order to make him go down into his pockets and make up the loss.

That is what is going on in South Carolina right now—this afternoon—and yet Congress sits here and does not do anything. Congress does not want to help those people. The men who own stock in Wall Street, the men who gamble in Wall Street in cotton, in stocks and bonds, will never help the man on the farm. I say that advisedly.

I repeat, Mr. President, that if we want to help the farmer, if we want to get rid of the cotton exchanges, we have got to intrust administration to men who do not deal in them, who do not buy cotton futures, who do not deal in Wall Street, who have no accounts in Wall Street, and who do not vote for the interest of their own pockets and their own stocks in Wall Street; we have got to get men who vote for the laboring people of this country and not men who are constantly receiving telegrams and long-distance calls from Wall Street.

In my own State presidents of two of these banks have recently been kicked out. One of them was an ex-Congressman, the gentleman who has been so highly praised here on the floor this evening. He was the president of one of the banks, and he has gone. The president of another was a fellow who was sent there from the Atlanta (Ga.) Penitentiary. Thank God, he has gone, too. They got another poor fellow in such a close place that he committed suicide and went to hell to get out of the mess. [Laughter.] Three or four other people connected with the bank have resigned. Two have been sent to the penitentiary. Yet when I submitted a resolution here and had it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency asking that committee to investigate the conditions, they reported the resolution back—and the report is in my desk—and said that nothing is wrong; there is nothing needing an investigation. What a lie! I wonder what the members of that committee think about it to-day. I wonder what that poor fellow who is down below in the fire, shoveling coal, thinks about the committee? [Laughter.] If the Senate had adopted that resolution and the committee had investigated the situation, that poor fellow might have been saved and the conditions prevailing there might have been remedied.

As suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] a few moments ago, the farmer who borrowed money from the bank had to take stock in it. He has lost his stock and is seeing it gobbled up by men who have money. Every law that has been passed by Congress for 50 years has been in the interest of the moneyed man. Not a law has been passed by Congress that has been of any use in the interest of the poor people, the laboring people of this country. No matter by which side it was passed or for what purpose, its administration has been put in such hands that it has been used as a club of tyranny against the men in whose aid and behalf it was claimed the bill was being enacted. My colleagues know that and the people know it.

Somebody may say, "Oh, yes; but they are satisfied with it. They elected Hoover." Mr. President, thank God, South Carolina did not have anything to do with that. [Laughter.] It gave him about 5,000 votes, and gave them merely as a compliment.

Mr. CARAWAY. What kind of a compliment?

Mr. BLEASE. Merely as a sort of compliment to keep him from taking Joe Talbert out of his job, I reckon. Joe collects the money for them down there and turns it over to the Republican campaign fund. So, I reckon they can not turn him out, and they might just as well have Joe as somebody else.

I repeat, Mr. President, if we want to relieve the farmer and the laboring man, let us pass some law and put it in the hands of honest administrators who really mean to help them and want to help them; but do not keep making pretty speeches here and sending them out in the RECORD, and having people read them and talking about what we are doing for the farmer.

I could tell the people what we are doing for him if it were inside the rules of parliamentary law to do so. [Laughter.] I would tell them just what the old fellow said who went to church. He was a great, large, fine-looking man, a very handsome man. The preacher asked him what the Lord had done for him. He said He had been mighty good to him, mighty nice to him. A few years after that the preacher held a meeting in the same place and an old fellow came in and sat down in a seat. It was having one of those good old-fashioned Methodist meetings, where the congregation rise and give their experiences. I wish they would go back to them and have more old-fashioned religion, rather than merely preach religion for those who have money. They used to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified, but they have almost quit that now. The preacher said, "I have not heard from you. What about you?" The old fellow got up, twisted around on one side, got his stick and pulled himself up and looked at the preacher and said, "Well, parson, I reckon you can see what He has done for me." The parson said, "It looks like he treated you pretty bad." The old fellow replied, "Yes; He played hell with me." [Laughter.] That is about what Congress has done with the cotton farmer.

Mr. President and Senators, if you want to help the cotton farmer quit parliamentary pariance, quit playing to Wall Street, quit trying to make stocks and bonds go higher, and all the time robbing the poor fellow who is at work. Let us be honest with our people and honest with ourselves and enact some law that will do them some good and not enact a law that will simply mean their robbery.

I have letters here in my desk that I have been wanting to read to the Senate, but I have not had the opportunity of doing so and I will not now take the time to read them to the Senate. They are most pitiful letters, some of them showing how the farm land bank in South Carolina is robbing the farmers of that section of the country. They put in jail in one of the States a brother of the governor, Mr. Preus, just the other day on account of a $50,000 transaction in one of those banks. Yet we are saying that we are helping the farmer.

Yet you are helping the farmer! Congress never has helped the farmer, and never has helped the laboring man; and the reason why we do not help him is because we do not look the truth squarely in the face.

I appeal to Congress that if they want to help the farmer, the way to do it is to go right down and help him and quit fooling him; quit deceiving him. I know how he is going to get help. We all know that. The only help he is ever going to get is what he gives to himself and what God Almighty gives to him. Men who gamble on Wall Street, who own large interests in steel, oil, railroads, and like bonds and stocks will never vote against their own interests, for where a man's pocketbook is there is his heart, and no man, Senator or Representative, can serve both God and mammon. Call the roll and exclude any man from voting on this issue who owns such stock.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 12, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE, AND CONSULAR RIGHTS WITH AUSTRIA

In executive session this day a treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom and from the resolution agreed to in connection therewith, as follows:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and Austria, signed at Vienna on June 19, 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and Austria, signed at Vienna, on June 19, 1928.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 1, 1928.

TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND CONSULAR RIGHTS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF AUSTRIA

The United States of America and the Republic of Austria, desirous of strengthening the bond of peace which happily prevails between them, by arrangements designed to promote friendly intercourse between their respective territories through provisions responsive to the spiritual, cultural, economic and commercial aspirations of the peoples thereof, have resolved to conclude a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights and for that purpose have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Mr. Albert Henry Washburn, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Austria, and

The Federal President of the Republic of Austria, Monsignore Ignatius Seipel, Doctor of Theology, Federal Chancellor,

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties shall be permitted to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other; to exercise liberty of conscience and freedom of worship; to engage in professional, scientific, religious, philanthropic, manufacturing and commercial work of every kind without interference; to carry on every form of commercial activity which is not forbidden by the local law; to employ agents of their choice, and generally to do anything incidental to or necessary for the enjoyment of any of the foregoing privileges upon the same terms as nationals of the state of residence or as nationals of the nation hereafter to be most favored by it, submitting themselves to all local laws and regulations duly established.

The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties within the territories of the other shall be permitted to own, erect or lease and occupy appropriate buildings and to lease lands for residential, scientific, religious, philanthropic, manufacturing, commercial and mortuary purposes upon the same terms as nationals of the country.

As regards the acquisition, possession, and disposition of immovable property, except as regards the leasing of lands for specified purposes provided for in the foregoing paragraph, the nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the territory of the other, subject to reciprocity, the treatment generally accorded to foreigners by the laws of the place where the property is situated.

The nationals of either High Contracting Party within the territories of the other shall not be subjected to the payment of any internal charges or taxes other or higher than those that are exacted of and paid by its nationals.

The nationals of each High Contracting Party shall enjoy freedom of access to the courts of justice of the other on conforming to the local laws, as well for the prosecution as for the defense of their rights, and in all degrees of jurisdiction established by law.

The nationals of each High Contracting Party shall receive within the territories of the other, upon submitting to conditions imposed upon its nationals, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect that degree of protection that is required by international law. Their property shall not be taken without due process of law and without payment of just compensation.

Nothing contained in this Treaty shall be construed to affect existing statutes of either of the High Contracting Parties in relation to the immigration of aliens or the right of either of the High Contracting Parties to enact such statutes.

ARTICLE II

With respect to that form of protection granted by National, State or Provincial laws establishing civil liability for injuries or for death, and giving to relatives or heirs or dependents of an injured party a right of action or a pecuniary benefit, such relatives or heirs or dependents of the injured party, himself a national of either of the High Contracting Parties and within any of the territories of the other, shall regardless of their alienage or residence outside of the territory where the injury occurred, enjoy the same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to nationals, and under like conditions.

ARTICLE III

The dwellings, warehouses, manufactories, shops and other places of business, and all premises thereto appertaining of the nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties in the territories of the other, used for any purposes set forth in Article I, shall be respected. It shall not be allowable to make a domiciliary visit to, or search of any such buildings and premises, or there to examine and inspect books, papers or accounts, except under the conditions and in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws, ordinances and regulations for nationals.

ARTICLE IV

Where, on the death of any person holding real or other immovable property or interests therein within the territories of one High Contracting Party, such property or interests therein would, by the laws of the country or by a testamentary disposition, descend or pass to a national of the other High Contracting Party, whether resident or non-resident, were he not disqualified by the laws of the country where such property or interests therein is or are situated, such national shall be allowed a term of three years in which to sell the same, this term to be reasonably prolonged if circumstances render it necessary, and withdraw the proceeds thereof, without restraint or interference, and exempt from any succession, probate or administrative duties or charges other than those which may be imposed in like cases upon the nationals of the country from which such proceeds may be drawn.

Nationals of either High Contracting Party may have full power to dispose of their personal property of every kind within the territories of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise, and their heirs, legatees and donees, of whatsoever nationality, whether resident or non-resident, shall succeed to such personal property, and may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and retain or dispose of the same at their pleasure subject to the payment of such duties or charges only as the nationals of the High Contracting Party within whose territories such property may be or belong shall be liable to pay in like cases.

ARTICLE V

The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties in the exercise of the right of freedom of worship, within the territories of the other, as hereinabove provided, may, without annoyance or molestation of any kind by reason of their religious belief or otherwise, conduct services either within their own houses or within any appropriate buildings which they may be at liberty to erect and maintain in convenient situations, provided their teachings and practices are not inconsistent with public order or public morals and provided further they conform to all laws and regulations duly established in these territories; and they may also be permitted to bury their dead according to their religious customs in suitable and convenient places established and maintained for the purpose, subject to the established mortuary and sanitary laws and regulations of the place of burial.

ARTICLE VI

In the event of war between either High Contracting Party and a third State, such Party may draft for compulsory military service nationals of the other having a permanent residence within its territories and who have formally, according to its laws, declared an intension to adopt its nationality by naturalization, unless such individuals depart from the territories of said belligerent Party within sixty days after a declaration of war.

ARTICLE VII

Between the territories of the High Contracting Parties there shall be freedom of commerce and navigation. The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties equally with those of the most favored nation, shall have liberty freely to come with their vessels and cargoes to all places, ports and waters of every kind within the territorial limits of the other which are or may be open to foreign commerce and navigation. Nothing in this Treaty shall be construed to restrict the right of either High Contracting Party to impose, on such terms as it may see fit, prohibitions or restrictions of a sanitary character designed to protect human, animal or plant life, or regulations for the enforcement of police or revenue laws.

Each of the High Contracting Parties binds itself unconditionally to impose no higher or other duties or charges, and no conditions, prohibitions or restrictions, on the importation of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the territories of the other Party, from whatever place arriving, than are or shall be imposed on the importation of any like article, the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country; nor shall any such duties, charges, conditions, prohibitions, or restrictions on importations be made effective retroactively.

Each of the High Contracting Parties also binds itself unconditionally to impose no higher or other charges or other restrictions or prohibitions on goods exported to the territories of the other High Contracting Party than are imposed on goods exported to any other foreign country.

In the event of licenses being issued by either of the High Contracting Parties for the importation into or exportation from its territories of articles the importation or exportation of which is restricted or prohibited, the conditions under which such licenses may be obtained shall be publicly announced and clearly stated in such a manner as to enable traders interested to become acquainted with them; the method of licensing shall be as simple and unvarying as possible and applications for licenses shall be dealt with as speedily as possible. Moreover, the conditions under which such licenses are issued by either of the High Contracting Parties for goods imported from or exported to the territories of the other Party shall be as favorable as the conditions under which licenses are issued in respect of any other foreign country. In the event of rations or quotas being established for the importation or exportation of articles restricted or prohibited, each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to grant for the importation from or exportation to the territories of the other Party an equitable share in the allocation of the quantity of restricted goods which may be authorized for importation or exportation. In the application of the provisions of this paragraph no distinction shall be made between direct and indirect shipments. It is agreed, moreover, that in the event either High Contracting Party shall be engaged in war, it may enforce such import or export restrictions as may be required by the national interest.

Any advantage of whatsoever kind which either High Contracting Party may extend, by treaty, law, decree, regulation, practice or otherwise, to any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country shall simultaneously and unconditionally, without request and without compensation, be extended to the like article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the other High Contracting Party.

All articles which are or may be legally imported from foreign countries into ports of the United States or are or may be legally exported therefrom in vessels of the United States may likewise be imported into those ports or exported therefrom in Austrian vessels without being liable to any other or higher duties or charges whatsoever than if such articles were imported or exported in vessels of the United States; and, reciprocally, all articles which are or may be legally imported from foreign countries into the ports of Austria or are or may be legally exported therefrom in Austrian vessels may likewise be imported into those ports or exported therefrom in vessels of the United States without being liable to any other or higher duties or charges whatsoever than if such articles were imported or exported in Austrian vessels.

With respect to the amount and collection of duties on imports and exports of every kind, each of the two High Contracting Parties binds itself to give to the nationals, vessels and goods of the other the advantage of every favor, privilege or immunity which it shall have accorded to the nationals, vessels and goods of a third State, whether such favored State shall have been accorded such treatment gratuitously or in return for reciprocal compensatory treatment. Every such favor, privilege or immunity which shall hereafter be granted the nationals, vessels or goods of a third State shall simultaneously and unconditionally, without request and without compensation, be extended to the other High Contracting Party, for the benefit of itself, its nationals, vessels and goods.

The stipulations of this Article shall not extend to the treatment which either Contracting Party shall accord to purely border traffic within a zone not exceeding 10 miles (15 kilometres) wide on either side of its customs frontier, or to the treatment which is accorded by the United States to the commerce of Cuba under the provisions of the Commercial Convention concluded by the United States and Cuba on December 11, 1902, or any other commercial convention which hereafter may be concluded by the United States with Cuba, or to the commerce of the United States with any of its dependencies and the Panama Canal Zone under existing or future laws.

ARTICLE VIII

The nationals and merchandise of each High Contracting Party within the territories of the other shall receive the same treatment as nationals and merchandise of the country with regard to internal taxes, transit duties, charges in respect to warehousing and other facilities and the amount of drawbacks and bounties.

ARTICLE IX

Limited liability and other corporations and associations, whether or not for pecuniary profit, which have been or may hereafter be organized in accordance with and under the laws, National, State or Provincial, of either High Contracting Party and maintain a central office within the territories thereof, shall have their judicial status recognized by the other High Contracting Party provided that they pursue no aims within its territories contrary to its laws. They shall enjoy free access to the courts of law and equity, on conforming to the laws regulating the matter, as well for the prosecution as for the defense of rights in all the degrees of jurisdiction established by law.

The right of such corporations and associations of either High Contracting Party so recognized by the other to establish themselves within its territories, establish branch offices and fulfill their functions therein shall depend upon, and be governed solely by, the consent of such Party as expressed in its National, State or Provincial laws.

ARTICLE X

The nationals of either High Contracting Party shall enjoy within the territories of the other, reciprocally and upon compliance with the conditions there imposed, such rights and privileges as have been or may hereafter be accorded the nationals of any other State with respect to the organization of and participation in limited liability and other corporations and associations, for pecuniary profit or otherwise, including the rights of promotion, incorporation, purchase and ownership and sale of shares and the holding of executive or official positions therein. In the exercise of the foregoing rights and with respect to the regulation or procedure concerning the organization or conduct of such corporations or associations, such nationals shall be subjected to no conditions less favorable than those which have been or may hereafter be imposed upon the nationals of the most favored nation. The rights of any of such corporations or associations as may be organized or controlled or participated in by the nationals of either High Contracting Party within the territories of the other to exercise any of their functions therein, shall be governed by the laws and regulations, national, state or provincial, which are in force or may hereafter be established within the territories of the Party wherein they propose to engage in business. The foregoing stipulations do not apply to the organization of and participation in political associations.

The nationals of either High Contracting Party shall, moreover, enjoy within the territories of the other, reciprocally and upon compliance with the conditions there imposed, such rights and privileges as have been or may hereafter be accorded the nationals of any other State with respect to the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain of the other.

ARTICLE XI

Commercial travellers representing manufacturers, merchants and traders domiciled in the territories of either High Contracting Party shall on their entry into and sojourn in the territories of the other Party and on their departure therefrom be accorded the most favored nation treatment in respect of customs and other privileges and of all charges and taxes of whatever denomination applicable to them or to their samples.

If either High Contracting Party require the presentation of an authentic document establishing the identity and authority of a commercial traveller, a certificate issued by any of the following in the country of his departure shall be accepted as satisfactory:

a) the authority designated for the purpose;

b) a chamber of commerce;

c) any trade or commercial association recognized for the purpose by the diplomatic representative of the Contract Party requiring such certificates.

ARTICLE XII

There shall be complete freedom of transit through the territories including territorial waters of each High Contracting Party on the routes most convenient for international transit, by rail, navigable waterway, and canal, other than the Panama Canal and waterways and canals which constitute international boundaries of the United States, to persons and goods coming from or going through the territories of the other High Contracting Party, except such persons as may be forbidden admission into its territories or goods of which the importation may be prohibited by law. Persons and goods in transit shall not be subjected to any transit duty, or to any unnecessary delays or restrictions, and shall be given national treatment as regards charges, facilities, and all other matters.

Goods in transit must be entered at the proper customhouse, but they shall be exempt from all customs or other similar duties.

All charges imposed on transport and transit shall be reasonable, having regard to the conditions of the traffic.

ARTICLE XIII

Each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to receive from the other, consular officers in those of its ports, places and cities, where it may be convenient and which are open to consular representatives of any foreign country.

Consular officers of each of the High Contracting Parties shall, after entering upon their duties, enjoy reciprocally in the territories of the other all the rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities which are enjoyed by officers of the same grade of the most favored nation. As official agents, such officers shall be entitled to the high consideration of all officials, national or local, with whom they have official intercourse in the state which receives them.

The Government of each of the High Contracting Parties shall furnish free of charge the necessary exequatur of such consular officers of the other as present a regular commission signed by the chief executive of the appointing state and under its great seal; and it shall issue to a subordinate or substitute consular officer duly appointed by an accepted superior consular officer with the approbation of his Government, or by any other competent officer of that Government, such documents as according to the laws of the respective countries shall be requisite for the exercise by the appointee of the consular function. On the exhibition of an exequatur, or other document issued in lieu thereof to such subordinate, such consular officer shall be permitted to enter upon his duties and to enjoy the rights, privileges and immunities granted by this Treaty.

ARTICLE XIV

Consular officers, nationals of the state by which they are appointed, shall be exempt from arrest except when charged with the commission of offenses locally designated as crimes other than misdemeanors and subjecting the individual guilty thereof to punishment. Such officers shall be exempt from military billetings, and from service of any military or naval, administrative or police character whatsoever.

In criminal cases the attendance at the trial by a consular officer as a witness may be demanded by the prosecution or defense. The demand shall be made with all possible regard for the consular dignity and the duties of the office; and there shall be compliance on the part of the consular officer.

Consular officers shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in the state which receives them in civil cases, subject to the proviso, however, that when the officer is a national of the state which appoints him and is engaged in no private occupation for gain, his testimony shall be taken orally or in writing at his residence or office and with due regard for his convenience. The officer should, however, voluntarily give his testimony at the trial whenever it is possible to do so without serious interference with his official duties.

ARTICLE XV

Consular officers, including employees in a consulate, nationals of the State by which they are appointed other than those engaged in private occupations for gain within the State where they exercise their functions shall be exempt from all taxes, National, State, Provincial and Municipal, levied upon their persons or upon their property, except taxes levied on account of the possession or ownership of immovable property situated in, or income derived from sources within the territories of the State within which they exercise their functions. All consular officers and employees, nationals of the State appointing them, shall be exempt from the payment of taxes on the salary, fees or wages received by them in compensation for their consular services.

Lands and buildings situated in the territories of either High Contracting Party, of which the other High Contracting Party is the legal or equitable owner and which are used exclusively for diplomatic or consular purposes by that owner, shall be exempt from taxation of every kind, National, State, Provincial and Municipal, other than assessments levied for services or local public improvements by which the premises are benefited.

ARTICLE XVI

Consular officers may place over the outer door of their respective offices the arms of their State with an appropriate inscription designating the official office. Such officers may also hoist the flag of their country on their offices including those situated in the capitals of the two countries. They may likewise hoist such flag over any boat or vessel employed in the exercise of the consular function.

The consular offices and archives shall at all times be inviolable. They shall under no circumstances be subject to invasion by any authorities of any character within the country where such offices are located. Nor shall the authorities under any pretext make any examination or seizure of papers or other property deposited within a consular office. Consular offices shall not be used as places of asylum. No consular officer shall be required to produce official archives in court or testify as to their contents.

Upon the death, incapacity, or absence of a consular officer having no subordinate consular officer at his post, secretaries or chancellors, whose official character may have previously been made known to the government of the State where the consular function was exercised, may temporarily exercise the consular function of the deceased or incapacitated or absent consular officer; and while so acting shall enjoy all the rights, prerogatives and immunities granted to the incumbent.

ARTICLE XVII

Consular officers, nationals of the State by which they are appointed, may, within their respective consular district, address the authorities, National, State, Provincial or Municipal, for the purpose of protecting their countrymen in the enjoyment of their rights accruing by treaty or otherwise. Complaint may be made for the infraction of those rights. Failure upon the part of the proper authorities to grant redress or to accord protection may justify interposition through the diplomatic channel, and in the absence of a diplomatic representative, a consul general or the consular officer stationed at the capital may apply directly to the government of the country.

ARTICLE XVIII

Consular officers may, in pursuance of the laws of their own country, take, at any appropriate place within their respective districts, the depositions of any occupants of vessels of their own country, or of any national of, or of any person having permanent residence within the territories of, their own country. Such officers may draw up, attest, certify and authenticate unilateral acts, deeds, and testamentary dispositions of their countrymen, and also contracts to which a countryman is a party. They may draw up, attest, certify and authenticate written instruments of any kind purporting to express or embody the conveyance or encumbrance of property of any kind within the territory of the State by which such officers are appointed, and unilateral acts, deeds, testamentary dispositions and contracts relating to property situated, or business to be transacted, within the territories of the State by which they are appointed, embracing unilateral acts, deeds, testamentary dispositions or agreements executed solely by nationals of the State within which such officers exercise their functions.

Instruments and documents thus executed and copies and translations thereof, when duly authenticated under his official seal by the consular officer, shall be received as evidence in the territories of the contracting parties as original documents or authenticated copies, as the case may be, and shall have the same force and effect as if drawn by and executed before a notary or other public officer duly authorized in the country by which the consular officer was appointed; provided, always that such documents shall have been drawn and executed in conformity to the laws and regulations of the country where they are designed to take effect.

ARTICLE XIX

In the case of the death of a national of either High Contracting Party in the territory of the other without having in the territory of his decease any known heirs or testamentary executors by him appointed, the competent local authorities shall at once inform the nearest consular officer of the State of which the deceased was a national of the fact of his death, in order that necessary information may be forwarded to the parties interested.

In case of the death of a national of either of the High Contracting Parties without will or testament, in the territory of the other High Contracting Party, the consular officer of the State of which the deceased was a national and within whose district the deceased made his home at the time of death, shall, so far as the laws of the country permit and pending the appointment of an administrator and until letters of administration have been granted, be deemed qualified to take charge of the property left by the decedent for the preservation and protection of the same. Such consular officer shall have the right to be appointed as administrator within the discretion of a tribunal or other agency controlling the administration of estates provided the laws of the place where the estate is administered so permit.

Whenever a consular officer accepts the office of administrator of the estate of a deceased countryman, he subjects himself as such to the jurisdiction of the tribunal or other agency making the appointment for all necessary purposes to the same extent as the national of the country where he was appointed.

ARTICLE XX

A consular officer of either High Contracting Party may in behalf of his non-resident countrymen collect and receipt for their distributive shares derived from estates in process of probate or accruing under the provisions of so-called Workmen's Compensation Laws or other like statutes, for transmission through channels prescribed by his Government to the proper distributees.

ARTICLE XXI

Each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to permit the entry free of all duty and without examination of any kind, of all furniture, equipment and supplies intended for official use in the consular offices of the other, and to extend to such consular officers of the other and their families and suites as are its nationals, the privilege of entry free of duty of their personal or household effects actually in use which accompany such consular officers, their families or suites, or which arrive shortly thereafter, provided, nevertheless, that no article, the importation of which is prohibited by the law of either of the High Contracting Parties, may be brought into its territories.

It is understood, however, that this privilege shall not be extended to consular officers who are engaged in any private occupation for gain in the countries to which they are accredited, save with respect to governmental supplies.

ARTICLE XXII

Subject to any limitation or exception hereinabove set forth, or hereafter to be agreed upon, the territories of the High Contracting Parties to which the provisions of this Treaty extend shall be understood to comprise all areas of land, water, and air over which the Parties claim and exercise dominion as sovereign thereof, except the Panama Canal Zone.

ARTICLE XXIII

Nothing in the present Treaty shall be construed to limit or restrict in any way the rights, privileges and advantages accorded to the United States or its nationals or to Austria or its nationals by the Treaty between the United States and Austria establishing friendly relations, concluded on August 24, 1921.

ARTICLE XXIV

The present Treaty shall remain in full force for the term of six years from the date of the exchange of ratifications, on which date it shall begin to take effect in all of its provisions.

If within one year before the expiration of the aforesaid period of six years neither High Contracting Party notifies to the other an intention of modifying, by change or omission, any of the provisions of any of the articles in this Treaty or of terminating it upon the expiration of the aforesaid period, the Treaty shall remain in full force and effect after the aforesaid period and until one year from such a time as either of the High Contracting Parties shall have notified to the other an intention of modifying or terminating the Treaty.

ARTICLE XXV

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Vienna as soon as possible.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the same and have affixed their seals hereto.

DONE in duplicate in the English and German languages at Vienna, this 19th day of June 1928.

[SEAL.] ALBERT HENRY WASHBURN.
[SEAL.] SEIPEL.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Seventieth Congress, second session, a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights with Austria, signed at Vienna on June 19, 1928, subject to the following reservation and understanding to be set forth in an exchange of notes between the high contracting parties so as to make it plain that this condition is understood and accepted by each of them:

That the sixth paragraph of Article VII shall remain in force for 12 months from the date of exchange of ratification, and, if not then terminated on 90 days' previous notice, shall remain in force until either of the high contracting parties shall enact legislation inconsistent therewith, when the same shall automatically lapse at the end of 60 days from such enactment, and on such lapse each high contracting party shall enjoy all the rights which it would have possessed had such paragraph not been embraced in this treaty.

REGULATING TARIFF RELATIONS WITH REPUBLIC OF CHINA

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty regulating tariff relations between the United States and China, signed at Peiping (Peking) on July 25, 1928.

This treaty, which is an evidence of the desire of the United States to deal justly with the Chinese Nation, was negotiated and signed by virtue of full powers issued by me. It is the first treaty entered into by the Nationalist Government of the Republic of China. It provides that the principle of complete national tariff autonomy shall apply in the tariff relations between the United States and China, in place of the provisions of existing treaties, and that in connection therewith neither country shall discriminate against the other.

I am in entire sympathy with the principles involved and the treaty has my unqualified approval.

The attention of the Senate is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, with inclosures, wherein the course of events leading to the negotiation and signature of the treaty is reviewed. The views of the Secretary of State have my full concurrence.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view, if his judgment approve thereof, to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, a treaty regulating tariff relations between the United States and China, which was signed on behalf of the United States by the American Minister at Peiping (Peking) and on the part of the Nationalist Government of the Republic of China by the Minister of Finance of that Government, on July 25, 1928.

The terms of existing treaties between the United States and China, which were concluded prior to the Treaty of Washington of February 6, 1922, provide for a Chinese tariff on imports and exports of 5 per cent ad valorem or for specific duties computed on the basis of an ad valorem rate of 5 per cent. These treaties also provide for the issuance by China of drawback certificates for the return of duties, and they fix the rates at which China may collect transit dues and tonnage dues.

The treaty of Washington of February 6, 1922, relating to the revision of the Chinese customs tariff, to which the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal are signatories, and Denmark, Norway, Spain, and Sweden have adhered, provided for a conference of the interested powers to revise the tariff provisions of existing treaties with China and to authorize the levying of surtaxes on dutiable goods imported into or exported from China. That treaty was ratified by the last one of the signatory powers on July 20, 1925.

Shortly before that time, I informed the American minister at Peking that this Government believed that the powers concerned should expedite preparations for holding the special tariff conference and that this conference should not only carry out the stipulations of the Washington treaty but should also make recommendations with a view to granting complete tariff autonomy to China. The tariff conference met at Peking on October 26, 1925, and the delegates of the United States had full powers to negotiate a new treaty recognizing tariff autonomy for China. On November 19, 1925, there was adopted a resolution which affirmed the right of China to enjoy tariff autonomy and which envisaged the going into effect of the Chinese national tariff law on January 1, 1929. Unfortunately this conference was forced to adjourn on account of civil conflict in China, without carrying out its program.

In my statement made public on January 27, 1927, a copy of which is attached, there was affirmed again this Government's readiness to conclude a treaty recognizing the tariff autonomy of China as soon as there should emerge in China a situation in which it would be possible for the Chinese to appoint representatives with whom representatives of the United States could enter upon treaty negotiations. When, after the military activities of last spring, the Nationalist forces came into occupation at Peking, such a situation arose for the first time since the inconclusive and forced adjournment of the Peking tariff conference, and it became possible to negotiate a treaty.

This treaty relates to the regulation of tariff relations between the United States and China. It abrogates the provisions of existing treaties between the two countries which relate to rates of duty on imports and exports of merchandise, drawbacks, transit dues, and tonnage dues. The two countries agree that the principle of complete national tariff autonomy shall apply between them and that neither shall discriminate against the other in the field of tariffs. The underlying principles of national autonomy and equality of treatment are those that apply generally among independent nations.

Copies of the existing treaties containing the provisions affected by the new treaty are inclosed.

It is believed that by the signing of this treaty a benefit has been conferred upon all concerned, in that, while safeguarding American interests and doing no injury to the interests of any other country, the way has been pointed and a model has been provided for a procedure whereby the powers may relinquish their so-called "control" over China's tariff. It is believed, moreover, that this action is in conformity with the traditional American policy of friendship toward the Chinese nation.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 1, 1928.

TREATY REGULATING TARIFF RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The United States of America and the Republic of China, both being animated by an earnest desire to maintain the good relations which happily subsist between the two countries, and wishing to extend and consolidate the commercial intercourse between them, have, for the purpose of negotiating a treaty designed to facilitate these objects, named as their Plenipotentiaries:—

The President of the United States of America:
J. V. A. MacMurray, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China; and the Government Council of the Nationalist Government of the Republic of China:
T. V. Soong, Minister of Finance of the Nationalist Government of the Republic of China; who, having met and duly exchanged their full powers, which have been found to be in proper form, have agreed upon the following treaty between the two countries:

ARTICLE I

All provisions which appear in treaties hitherto concluded and in force between the United States of America and China relating to rates of duty on imports and exports of merchandise, drawbacks, transit dues and tonnage dues in China shall be annulled and become inoperative, and the principle of complete national tariff autonomy shall apply subject, however, to the condition that each of the High Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the territories of the other with respect to the above specified and any related matters treatment in no way discriminatory as compared with the treatment accorded to any other country.

The nationals of neither of the High Contracting Parties shall be compelled under any pretext whatever to pay within the territories of the other Party any duties, internal charges or taxes upon their importations and exportations other or higher than those paid by nationals of the country or by nationals of any other country.

The above provisions shall become effective on January 1, 1929, provided that the exchange of ratifications hereinafter provided shall have taken place by that date; otherwise, at a date four months subsequent to such exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE II

The English and Chinese texts of this Treaty have been carefully compared and verified; but, in the event of there being a difference of meaning between the two, the sense as expressed in the English text shall be held to prevail.

This treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in Washington as soon as possible.

In testimony whereof, we, the undersigned, by virtue of our respective powers have signed this Treaty in duplicate in the English and Chinese languages and have affixed our respective seals.

Done at Peiping, the 25th day of July, 1928, corresponding to the 25th day of the 7th month of the 17th year of the Republic of China.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, February 11, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

As we begin to serve the common cause of our country, we thank Thee, blessed Lord God, that we may put our hands in Thine. Teach us that neither learning, wealth, nor glory can make up for a sensitive conscientiousness. Accept our praise for this day and the prospects of this week; may we not pass through them sad nor disconsolate, but happy in our work and glad to serve somebody and our homeland. Oh make it good and great; maintain its honor and its righteousness for God and man. Its foundations were laid amid the glad chantings of earth's immortals. Its final glories will be revealed when love and law shall sing together and the voices of the multitude shall become the music of the spheres. Hasten the day, Father. Amen.

The journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT, STATE OF IDAHO

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 9, 1929.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 29, 1928, an authenticated copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President, appointed in the State of Idaho at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1928, which you are requested to substitute for the certificate sent to you on December 15, 1928.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
For the Secretary of State:
TYLER DENNETT,
Chief, Division of Publications.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15712, the War Department appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15712, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee something relative to this. I understand in the Senate several claims have been attached to this regular appropriation bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. There has been one of considerable importance attached, and I think possibly a few others—minor claims.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman give us any information as to how he plans to handle that matter? I do not want to make a definite objection in reference to this matter going to conference, but it is a very important matter and many seem very much opposed to having a private claim added to a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand this particular claim is covered by a bill which passed the House and Senate and now is in conference and the House agreed to the payment of a certain amount. I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on War Claims with reference to this matter and told him I did not believe the House conferees would want to agree on a larger amount than carried in the House bill without bringing the matter back to the House.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. CRAMTON. The conferees will be obliged to bring it back to the House because it is not within their jurisdiction, being legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. We would have to bring it back.

Mr. CRAMTON. Whatever the amount, it would have to be brought back.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would like to ask for information if the House has not already acted on this matter and it has passed the House and had gone over to the Senate in the amount of $50,000?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir; with a 10 per cent attorney's fee clause added.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Now, why should they write that appropriation into a general appropriation bill when they had before them the same proposition practically that there would be if the appropriation were not made?

Mr. BARBOUR. I have not been able to think of any good reason for that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will not the record show that there is a statement in the Senate committee now to the effect that the person interested is satisfied with the House provision, and in all likelihood will not receive one cent more, even if the full amount in the Senate bill is carried?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Massachusetts is only interested to prevent any other body writing into an appropriation bill claims bills on which the House has acted or refused to act.

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that it is true the claim has been reduced from the original amount. A former Senator from New York, Senator Wadsworth, who examined the claim, said it was just and ought to be paid, and that they took advantage of the claimant and refused to pay it. Senator Wadsworth examined the claim and said it was an honest claim and ought to be paid in full. The Senator from Pennsylvania put it on the bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The judgment of either of those gentlemen is not binding on the House.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; and neither are you infallible.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. This bill passed the Senate and came over to the House, where it was amended by reducing the amount to $50,000, with a 10 per cent clause for attorneys' fees. That was in the last session. Along about the 24th of November, 1928, before this session convened, the claimant went to the Committee on Claims of the Senate and filed a written statement to the effect that he was satisfied with the amount of $50,000 provided in the House amendment and would accept it. From that date the controversy has not been concerning the amount the claimant wants, but concerning the amount that the attorneys will receive.

Mr. MILLER. What is the attorney's fee?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. In the bill passed by the Senate for $142,500 the attorney's fee would be $57,000, as the attorney has a contract for 40 per cent. On Saturday the claimant came into my office without invitation and stated that he was very much afraid that in the controversy over the attorney's fee Congress would adjourn without giving him anything, and he said he would file a statement with my committee. Let me read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1929.

This is to evidence that I, the undersigned, John W. Stockett, having signed an agreement before the Senate Committee on Claims about two months ago, to accept the House amendments to Senate bill 2319 in full and satisfactory settlement of my claim against the United States for use of patented breech and firing mechanisms used in heavy ordnance, do hereby state that it is my purpose and I hereby agree that out of said amount of $50,000 I will pay to Jerry South, who has been my attorney since April, 1927, the sum of $5,000, which is in accordance with the House amendment, and to the estate of Walter F. Rogers, the attorney who represented me in my suit with the Government during 20 years, from 1907 to 1927, an additional $5,000, which will leave me $40,000.

I feel that this is a just and fair settlement to myself and my attorneys.

JOHN W. STOCKETT.

Mrs. ELBERTA J. WHEELER.

Now, it seems to me in the face of the fact that the claimant is willing to accept the House amendment, and accept it as a just settlement and pay the attorneys these fees, $5,000 each, we ought to insist upon it and save the Government $82,500.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not interested in the attorneys' fees or in this man, but the record shows that this man is entitled to the amount of his claim. Senator Wadsworth went over it, and the man's house was about to be sold over his head, and he comes here and on account of his poverty is obliged to accept a smaller figure. He ought to have the proper amount of money due him.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman has been misinformed. The claimant has not been urged or even asked to accept a smaller figure. He has acted on his own judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Court of Claims which decided against the claimant. The War Department in letters addressed to the Speaker of this House in 1907, in 1909, and in 1910 recommended but $20,000, which claimant admitted before the Claims Committee of this House he would consider a fair, square compensation. Here we propose to give the claimant $50,000, and he, of course, is satisfied with it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I suppose he would have to be satisfied with anything.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I would like to have an understanding with the gentleman having this bill in charge, to the effect that no agreement with the Senate conferees will be made different from the amendments by the House on this claim without our having a right to vote on it.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will have to come back to the House for a vote anyway.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Apropos of this amendment, I was interested in another amendment a few days ago, where we could not get a definite understanding about bringing the question back to the House for a vote on it.

Mr. BARBOUR. This is only one of 61 questions raised in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Inasmuch as the matter has been referred to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], namely, the failure to bring back to the House another appropriation bill which has been in conference, I would like to ask the leader on that side as to whether he has any information as to when the conferees will report on the first deficiency bill now pending?

Mr. TILSON. I am unable to inform the gentleman, except to say that when there is an agreement for the conferees to report to the House they will doubtless report it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, let us have the regular order.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. While we have this matter up, I may say that the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut was not entirely conclusive. I want to ask the gentleman, who will be one of the conferees, if he has any assurance that a conference report will be made on that bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that if the conferees on the part of the Senate maintain their attitude, it is uncertain when the conference report will be made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman categorically if it is not a fact that the conferees on the part of the House have agreed not to report back a conference?

Mr. CRAMTON. It takes a great deal of courage to ask that question but not much to answer it. [Laughter.] I will say that there is no such agreement.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Does not the gentleman know it to be a fact that it has already been agreed between gentlemen having charge of the appropriation bill that you will include the other items in the new deficiency bill? Is not that understood?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; there is no such understanding.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to say that has not been discussed?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is always understood, I will say to the gentleman—and I do not think we need to have any specific understanding—that the majority of the Appropriations Committee—and ordinarily we have the support of the minority in that—are going to endeavor to handle appropriation bills in a way not to embarrass the business of the Government.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But is not that the understanding, that you are going to include the items now in the urgent deficiency bill in the general deficiency bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. We will cross all of these bridges when we reach them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I certainly hope the Appropriations Committee conferees will oppose the Stockett amendment in order to protect the integrity of this House. When a bill passes the Senate and passes the House and conferees have been appointed by the House, it is presumptuous for the body at the other end of the Capitol to incorporate it in an appropriation bill. Let the conferees appointed by the House from the War Claims Committee thrash the Stockett bill out with the Senate conferees. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I now understand the situation, the gentleman from California has assured the House that he will not agree to the Stockett amendment without bringing it back to the House, but he has not assured the House—and, as I understand it, has not been asked to assure the House—that if the Senate desires to recede he will not accept that recession. As I understand, if the Senate desires to recede on that amendment, the House conferees are prepared to join with them.

Mr. BARBOUR. Join with the Senate conferees?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and accept their recession.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Therefore it is a much different situation than was before the House the other day when the deficiency bill was under consideration, which the gentlemen have been speaking about.

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe it would meet with the entire approval of the House if we did that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BARBOUR, CLAGUE, TABER, HARRISON, and COLLINS.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 15386, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was done with the item with reference to pecans?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Under the Bureau of Plant Industry $10,000 was allowed for research with reference to diseases of pecans but the amendment under the Bureau of Soils for $10,000 was not allowed, for the reason that $10,000 for research work on soils, as far as pecans are concerned, would not be of any use, the reason for that being that they are raised in so many localities that it will take a larger amount. I think there is rather a mutual understanding that next year a program will be put on for soil and chemical research in the production of pecans that will cover the pecan area.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I ask the gentleman with reference to the naval stores item?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. With reference to the naval stores item, an increase of $12,000 was allowed.

Mr. EDWARDS. What about the phony peach item?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That was agreed to in a total of $100,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

SPECIAL LEAF-HOPPER RESEARCH

On No. 70: Appropriates $230,000, as proposed by the Senate, for special leaf-hopper research.

On Nos. 7, 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, 18, 25, 26, 27, 33, 35, 36, 41, 42, 49, 50, 53, 56, 57, 61, 63, 64, 67, 68, and 71 correct totals.

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 43, 46, 54, 55, and 69 are corrections of form.

IN DISAGREEMENT

The committee of conference has not agreed to the following Senate amendment:

On No. 15: Authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to charge and collect fees for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock subject to the provisions of the packers and stockyards act.

L. J. DICKINSON,
E. H. WASON,
JOHN W. SUMMERS,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 15: Page 25, line 5, after the word "jurisdiction," insert the following: "(15): Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, whenever necessary, authorize the charging and collection from owners of a reasonable fee for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock subject to the provisions of the said act for the purpose of determining the ownership of such livestock."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, whenever necessary, authorize the charging and collection from owners of a reasonable fee for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock subject to the provisions of the said act for the purpose of determining the ownership of such livestock: Provided further, That such fee shall not be imposed except upon written request made to the Secretary of Agriculture by the Board of Livestock Commissioners or duly organized livestock association of the States from which such livestock have originated or been shipped to market."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment just reported.

Mr. ABERNETHY. May I ask the gentleman a question? As I understand, the conference accepted the amendment of Senator OVERMAN, increasing the amount as to bulb pests.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It did.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a tabulated statement showing the adjustment of the items in this bill as between the House and the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

JOHN J. CAMPBELL

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7409) for the relief of John J. Campbell and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ARMY HOUSING BILL

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], a member of the Military Affairs Committee, who is unable to be present on account of illness, may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 15825, the Army housing bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, under date of May 16, 1928, I introduced H. R. 13825, providing for Army housing. The bill was unanimously reported out of the House Military Affairs Committee on May 21, 1928, and passed the House unanimously on May 28, 1928.

The report on the bill reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1793, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

AUTHORIZING APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 13825):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13825) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. JAMES, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill carries on the Army housing program which has been in the course of development since the original authorization in 1926. This bill provides authorization for additional housing as follows: 448 officers, 526 noncommissioned officers, 2,814 enlisted men, 526 patients in hospitals, 142 nurses.

The stations covered in this bill have practically all of them been visited by the chairman of the subcommittee on real estate and construction, Mr. JAMES, during the past year.

Previous authorizations under the present Army housing program carried a total of $37,239,359, which provides housing for the following: 717 officers, 771 noncommissioned officers, 27,394 enlisted men, 1,077 patients in hospitals.

The following letter from the Secretary of War shows that the bill meets the approval of the War Department and that its provisions are not in conflict with the financial program of the President. The detailed statement referred to in the letter from the Secretary of War is appended and immediately follows the letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: In compliance with your request of May 16, 1928, I am pleased to submit the following report on H. R. 13825:

The subject of the proposed legislation is a bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

This construction has not been previously authorized, and it is desired that it be authorized at this time so that the items may be included in the estimates for the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1931.

This construction relates to the permanent housing of Army personnel at the stations listed in the bill. Much of this construction is made necessary in meeting the needs of the Air Corps under the 5-year program as authorized by the act of July 2, 1926.

It is estimated that the total cost of the bill, if enacted into law, will be $15,066,260.

If any additional information is desired from the War Department, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

A detailed statement showing just what the bill will accomplish at each station is attached hereto and made a part of this report.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee: Maj. Gen. C. P. Summerall, Chief of Staff; Maj. Gen. B. Frank Cheatham, the Quartermaster General; Maj. Gen. J. E. Fechet, Chief of Air Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who states that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

Fort Wadsworth, N. Y.: Barracks, $50,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $30,000.

Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia: Nurses' quarters, $300,000.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase or condemnation real estate adjacent to Bolling Field, Washington, D. C., for extension and development of said flying field; and there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $666,000 for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $200,000, to be expended for the construction of a sea wall, and for necessary fill for improvement of landing field at Langley Field, Va., as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary.

The Senate has also added without amendment the items contained in H. R. 14154, which I introduced on December 3, 1928. The bill was reported out of the House Military Affairs Committee on December 11, 1928, and passed the House unanimously on January 7, 1929.

The report on the bill reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1941, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

TO AUTHORIZE CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL UNITS AT THE ARMY MEDICAL CENTER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. MCSWAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 14154:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14154) to authorize appropriations for construction at the Army medical center, District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This is a measure introduced by Mr. JAMES to authorize the construction of additional units at the Army medical center being established at Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C. The purpose of the appropriation of $890,000 at this time is explained in the letter of the Secretary of War, which is made a part of this report, as follows:

NOVEMBER 8, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit herewith a draft of bill which I request be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law, as follows:

"A bill to authorize appropriations for construction at the Army medical center, District of Columbia, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $890,000, to be expended for the construction and installation at the Army medical center, District of Columbia, of such buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Completion of Army Medical School, $840,000; addition to power plant, $50,000."

The completion of the Army Medical School is an important step in the program for the rehabilitation of the Army medical center. At the present time the following departments of the Army Medical School are housed in temporary buildings: Dental school, veterinary school, school of nursing, school for dietitians, physiotherapy, and occupational therapy aides.

The construction for which authorization is here requested will permit placing all the activities of the Army Medical School in one permanent fireproof building.

The Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1921 included an appropriation of $500,000 for Army Medical School construction. At the time this appropriation was made it was understood that this sum was to be expended for the beginning of construction of the school building, which when eventually completed would cost approximately $2,000,000.

This is confirmed by the record of testimony appearing on pages 273 and 274 and on pages 308 and 309 of the hearings before Subcommittee No. 1 of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.

The sum of $500,000 appropriated for the fiscal year 1921 was expended for construction of the south wing of the school. To complete the school building the following additional construction is now proposed:

New wing, duplicating existing building as to exterior size and construction	$471,000
Administration section, connecting above wing with existing building	338,000
Exterior work—roads, walks, retaining walls, etc	31,000
Total	840,000

An item of $50,000 is included in this bill for an addition to the power plant, including installation of an additional 1,000-horsepower boiler. This installation is necessary, as the present power plant is inadequate for the expansion at the Army medical center, due to new construction.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee:

Maj. Gen. M. W. Ireland, the Surgeon General.

Brig. Gen. W. E. Horton, Quartermaster Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

A similar letter has been addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

The Senate has also added, without amendment, the item contained in H. R. 14152, which I introduced on December 3, 1928, reported out of the House Military Affairs Committee on December 11, 1928, and passed the House unanimously on December 17, 1928.

The report on the bill reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1939, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR COAST DEFENSE

Mr. BOYLAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 14152):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14152) to authorize the acquisition of two tracts of land required in connection with the coast defense of the Atlantic seaboard, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This is a measure introduced by Mr. JAMES at the request of the Secretary of War in order that the War Department might acquire two tracts of land on the Atlantic seaboard deemed necessary in the proper defense of the Atlantic coast. The bill authorizes a sum not to exceed $20,000 for the purchase.

The letter of the Secretary of War explains the matter and is therefore made a part of this report, as follows:

NOVEMBER 24, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: Inclosed herewith is proposed draft of legislation authorizing the acquisition of two tracts of land required in connection with the coast defense of the Atlantic seaboard.

A secret study of the requirements of the War Department in the defense of the Atlantic seaboard has been in process for the past three years, and a board of officers has made certain recommendations requiring the purchase of two tracts of land, at a cost not to exceed $20,000. Because of the secret nature of this project, the draft of legislation herewith has been prepared allowing of a wide scope of selection. However, the property has been determined upon and recommended by all concerned, and your committee will be furnished with the secret records prepared in this case, if required.

There are no existing laws applicable to the purchase of this land, nor is there an appropriation available.

No changes will be brought about in existing laws by the proposed legislation, and I favor the passage of the legislation because of its urgency.

It is estimated that the total cost of the bill, if enacted into law, will not exceed $20,000.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officer is designated to appear before your committee: Brig. Gen. William E. Horton, War Department.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

The Senate has also added without amendment the item contained in H. R. 13853, which I introduced on May 17, 1928, at the request of the War Department. Senator DAVID REED, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, introduced a similar bill in the Senate on the same day. The letters from the Secretary of War read as follows:

MAY 15, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit the following draft of a bill, which I request be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law:

"A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Fishers Island Corporation a tract of land comprising part of the Fort H. G. Wright Military Reservation, N. Y.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell, upon such terms and conditions as he considers advisable, to the Fishers Island Corporation or its nominee, a tract of land containing 1⅛ acres, more or less, said tract now forming the extreme northeasterly corner of the Fort H. G. Wright Military Reservation, situate on Fishers Island, in the State of New York, which said tract is no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf, with and to the said the Fishers Island Corporation or its nominee, any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale; the proceeds of the sale of the property hereinbefore designated to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the fund known as the military posts construction fund: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall have the said tract surveyed and appraised at the expense of the Fishers Island Corporation: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall not sell said tract for a less consideration than the appraised value hereinbefore referred to."

There is no existing law authorizing the disposal of the land described in the proposed bill.

The land in question is no longer required for military purposes and the Fishers Island Corporation has expressed a desire to purchase the land in order to straighten out a dangerous curve in the main road leading up the island.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, Brig. Gen. William E. Horton, Quartermaster Corps, is designated to appear before that committee.

A similar letter has been addressed to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

JANUARY 26, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I am pleased to comply with your telephonic request of January 23, 1929, for certain additional information relative to H. R. 13853, which is a bill to authorize the sale of 1½ acres, more or less, of the Fort H. G. Wright Military Reservation.

The land in question is desired to straighten out a dangerous curve in the main road of the island. It is at the opposite side of the reservation from the utilities, fortifications, and fire-control station. Because of its location and negligible size and in view of the improvement to be made in the road, I am of the opinion that its alienation will work no disadvantage to the reservation.

No valuation can be placed upon the land at this time. The bill in question provides for an appraisement of the land at the expense of the Fishers Island Corporation.

The Fishers Island Corporation is a development or holding company which owns a large amount of the island and some of the principal improvements.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

The Senate has also added, without amendment, the item in H. R. 14156, which I introduced on December 3, 1928, reported out by the House Military Affairs Committee on December 11, 1928, and passed the House unanimously on January 24, 1929.

The report on the bill reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1943, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

CANNON-POWDER BLENDING UNIT, PICATINNY ARSENAL

Mr. WAINWRIGHT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 14156):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14156) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a cannon-powder blending unit at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J., having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This legislation is necessary because of a fire at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J., on July 31, 1928, as explained in the letter of the Secretary of War, which is made a part of this report, as follows:

NOVEMBER 21, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit herewith a draft of a bill which I request be introduced in the House and enacted into law.

The object of the proposed legislation is to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a cannon-powder blending unit at the Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J.

The facts with reference to this bill are as follows:

The cannon-powder blending unit at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J., was totally destroyed by fire on July 31, 1928. This was the only cannon-powder blender operated by and under the control of the Army.

Picatinny Arsenal requires at all times a blender of sufficient size to blend large lots of powder. Manufacturing orders on hand and placed with that arsenal require the use of such a blender in filling orders for propellant charges and complete rounds of ammunition of all calibers up to and including the 16-inch gun. The operations of the blender are necessary for the proper blending of new lots of powder, reblending of old lots of bulk powder manufactured in former years which are to be made up into charges, and which powder has not been blended within a period of one year, and for the proportional blending of very large lots of powder where same is necessary in the production of rounds of the same kind to meet current needs. The blender is an essential part of a powder factory. The experience gained by operating the blender is as important as other manufacturing operations in making powder. It is necessary that provision for such a blender, capable of handling large lots of powder, be made at this time in order that the manufacture of powder may be complete in one operation at this arsenal.

It is desired that in the construction of the blending unit there be used metal and noninflammable material throughout; also that a sprinkler system be installed. In the construction of the blender advantage will be taken of experience gained during the war and in recent years, so that the blender as finally erected will embody the latest improved features as to safety and economy of operation. This will tend to reduce the possibility of loss of the blender in case of fire.

The construction of this blender was not contemplated with the funds appropriated under "Rehabilitation of Picatinny Arsenal," as the unit at that time was in satisfactory condition. No funds under the rahibilitation program can be diverted to this project. The funds here requested are believed to be the minimum with which a satisfactory blender, having a capacity equal to that required by the rehabilitation program, can be rebuilt.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee: Maj. Gen. C. C. Williams, Chief of Ordnance; Maj. T. J. Smith, Ordnance Department; Maj. Charles R. Baxter, Ordnance Department.

The replacement of this blender is urgent and should be undertaken with the least possible delay. Favorable action by the Congress on this bill at an early date, to permit the appropriation of funds at the coming short session, will be appreciated.

A similar letter has been addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

The Senate has also added, without amendment, the items contained in H. R. 16503, which I introduced on January 22, 1929. The bill was favorably reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 2338, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY POSTS

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 16503):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16503) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. James, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

A complete explanation of this measure is carried in a letter of the Secretary of War and in a statement of construction required at military posts. The letter and statement are therefore made a part of this report, as follows:

JANUARY 25, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORIN: There have been prepared and are inclosed herewith—

(a) Draft of proposed legislation for authorization of Air Corps technical construction during the fiscal year 1931 under the 5-year program.

(b) Detailed defense for this construction.

It is requested this bill be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law.

This legislation should be enacted into law for the reasons stated in the detailed defense of each item.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee:

Assistant Secretary of War Mr. Davison.
Maj. Gen. James E. Fechet, Air Corps.
Maj. Rush B. Lincoln, General Staff.
Maj. Frank M. Kennedy, Air Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

An act to authorize appropriations for construction of military posts, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $5,150,306, to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such technical buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows:

Panama Canal Department, Albrook Field, concrete runways, $51,000; France Field, gas and oil storage system, $10,000; paint, oil, and dope warehouse and appurtenances to hangar, $13,016; concrete runway from hangars, $52,000; 6-inch gasoline pipe line from Coco Solo, $20,000; bombing range, $3,555; Hawaiian Department, new site, improvement to landing field, $623,000; Wheeler Field, hangars and field shop, $79,000; Boiling Field, D. C., hangars, $90,000; field shop, $60,000; central heating plants, $50,000; parachute and armament building, $15,000; photographic building, $36,000; radio building, $10,000; concrete runways and aprons, $53,700; Bowman Field, Louisville, Ky., hangar, $50,000; radio, photographic, and shops, $20,000; operations and administration building, $20,000; gas and oil storage system, $5,000; concrete runways, $13,000; Dryden, Tex., gasoline and oil storage system, $2,821; operations building, $5,000; Duncan Field, San Antonio, Tex., hangars and depot shop building, $220,000; oil-reclamation house, $13,000; Fairfield Air Depot, Fairfield, Ohio, hangars, $120,000; headquarters building, $40,000; central heating plant, $20,000; paint, oil, and dope warehouses, $20,000; Fort Leavenworth, Kans., completion of hangar, field shop, headquarters building, $35,000; central heating plants, $20,000; Langley Field, Va., hangars, $524,590; field warehouse, $100,000; headquarters and operations building, $80,000; photo, radio, parachute, and armament buildings, $76,000; central heating plants, $100,000; gas and oil storage system, $10,000; paint, oil, and dope warehouse, $5,000; improvement of landing field, $85,000; concrete runways, $122,098; Lordsburg, N. Mex., operations building, $5,000; gas and oil storage system, $2,821; March Field, Riverside, Calif., hangars, field shops, field warehouse, $75,000; gasoline and oil storage system, $10,000; concrete runways, $104,000; Marshall Field, Fort Riley, Kans., completion of hangars, shops, and technical buildings, $55,000; central heating plant, $30,000; Air Corps Tactical School, Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., hangars, $210,500; field shop, $19,000; field warehouse, $60,000; armament and parachute building, $5,000; concrete runways, $50,000; gas and oil storage system, $5,000; Mitchel Field, Long Island, N. Y., hangars, field shops, field warehouse, $141,000; armament and parachute building, $5,000; central heating plants, $75,000; Randolph Field, Tex., hangars, $220,000; field shops, $38,000; concrete runways, $232,500; Rockwell Field, Calif., hangars and field warehouse, $45,000; field shop, $100,000; construction of concrete runways, $50,000; Selfridge Field, Mich., hangars and field shop, $122,000; central heating plants, $60,000; concrete runways, $51,000; Shreveport, La. (attack wing), hangars, $200,000; field shop, $50,000; field warehouse, $45,000; headquarters and operations buildings, $85,000; radio, parachute, and armament buildings, $25,000; gas and oil storage system, $10,000; improvement to landing field, $85,000; Tucson, Ariz., operations building, $5,000; concrete floor in hangar, $1,705.

DEFENSE OF FISCAL YEAR 1931 AIR CORPS TECHNICAL CONSTRUCTION

PANAMA CANAL DEPARTMENT

Albrook Field

Concrete runways	$51,000

Fifty-one thousand dollars will be required to build the necessary concrete runways and warming-up line for this new station.

The above funds will complete all technical requirements for this station.

France Field

Gas and oil storage system	$10,000
Paint, oil, and dope warehouse and appurtenances to hangars	13,016
Concrete runway from hangars	52,000
6-inch gasoline pipe line from Coco Solo	20,000
Bombing range	3,555
Total	98,571

Ten thousand dollars is necessary for the installation of a permanent gas and oil storage system for service gas in the vicinity of the hangar line at this field. No such system is in existence at this station at the present time.

Ten thousand dollars is necessary to provide the necessary depot paint, oil, and dope warehouse at this station. At the present time there is no adequate building provided for the storage of these very inflammable and volatile supplies. Three thousand and sixteen dollars is required for appurtenances to hangars.

Fifty-two thousand dollars is required for the concrete runways and warming-up line. There is no such installation at this station at present.

Twenty thousand dollars will be required for replacement of one 50,000-gallon gasoline storage unit destroyed by fire in April, 1925, and to install a 6-inch pipe line connecting with the Navy's present pipe line to facilitate the discharge of gasoline from tank steamers into the gasoline holders at this field. At the present time a 4-inch line is in use which greatly delays the unloading of these tankers. This 4-inch line, however, will be retained as an emergency line.

There is no bombing range at this station. Three thousand five hundred and fifty-five dollars will clear sufficient land to provide the required range.

The above funds will complete all technical requirements for this station.

HAWAIIAN DEPARTMENT

New site

Improvement to landing field:
For tract A	$515,000
For tract B	108,000
Total	623,000

The above amount will provide for the necessary improvement to the anding field at this new site. Dredging and grading will have to be completed before occupancy of this field and before any technical buildings or housing can be constructed.

Wheeler Field

Hangars and field shop	$79,000

Seventy-nine thousand dollars will be required to increase these hangars to the proper size to accommodate the increased number of planes being assigned to tactical units and to provide fireproof ceilings for these buildings.

This will complete all the required Air Corps technical construction for this station.

Bolling Field, D. C.

Hangars	$90,000
Field shop	60,000
Central heating plants	50,000
Parachute and armament building	15,000
Photographic building	36,000
Radio building	10,000
Concrete runways and aprons	53,700
Total	314,700

Ninety thousand dollars is required for the additional bays and fireproof ceilings necessary for the four hangars authorized for construction at this station. The increased number of planes provided for tactical units require this increase in size of hangars. The above amount will also provide the necessary heating installation for these technical buildings.

This field is to be moved to a new site and the additional technical buildings listed above will be required at this new station.

Fifty-three thousand seven hundred dollars will be required for the necessary concrete runways and aprons and warming-up lines for this post at its new location.

The above funds will complete all technical requirements for this station.

Bowman Field, Louisville, Ky.

Hangar	$50,000
Radio, photographic, and shops	20,000
Operations and administration building	20,000
Gas and oil storage	5,000
Concrete runways	13,000
Total	108,000

Bowman Field, Louisville, Ky., has been under lease which terminated July 1, 1928, as an airdrome for reserve training. It has now been take over by the city of Louisville as a municipal airport and the property has been enlarged. The location of permanent buildings as now contemplated by the present owners is such as to require dismantling the present buildings owned by the Air Corps. These buildings are temporary structures and the new ones contemplated will have to correspond to the architecture of the other buildings owned by the airport. Unless money is made available to put up new buildings for the Air Corps, its activities will have to be abandoned at that station. The new lease will be arranged to run for 20 years which will be the approximate life of the Government buildings contemplated.

Dryden, Tex.

Gasoline and oil storage system	$2,821
Operations building	5,000
Total	7,821

This is a border airdrome located on airways route with no buildings other than a hangar. These installations are required for proper servicing of planes and proper operation of airways.

Duncan Field, San Antonio, Tex.

Hangars and depot shop building	$220,000
Oil reclamation house	13,000
Total	233,000

Twenty thousand dollars will be required to increase the two hangars, authorized for this station to the required size and to include the installation of the necessary fireproof ceilings in these buildings. Two hundred thousand dollars will be required to complete the shop building which will have to be of sufficient size to handle the needs of the new Air Corps training center as well as other activities located in this depot area, which will be double the size of the present shop building authorized for Fairfield.

There is no building provided for oil reclamation; $13,000 will provide for the necessary construction.

Fifty thousand dollars will be included in next fiscal year to complete total required Air Corps construction at this station.

Fairfield air depot, Fairfield, Ohio

Hangars	$120,000
Headquarters building	40,000
Central heating plant	20,000
Paint, oil, and dope warehouses	20,000
Total	200,000

One hundred and twenty thousand dollars will provide the two additional new hangars required for this depot, also the necessary funds to provide additional ceiling for the hangar already authorized and for the necessary heating installation for these hangars.

The present headquarters building is located in one end of a warehouse. It is necessary to provide a separate building for this post.

The heating plants existing are temporary and inadequate. The paint, oil, and dope warehouses are required for the isolated storage of these highly inflammable materials.

The above-mentioned construction, together with other construction Congress has authorized, will provide all technical buildings to accommodate the 5-year program.

Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Completion of hangar, field shop, headquarters building	$35,000
Central heating plants	20,000

Thirty-five thousand dollars will be necessary for the installation of a fireproof ceiling and additional bays in existing hangar building and for the completion of the necessary ceiling and partitions in shop building; also for the necessary heating installations in these technical buildings.

Twenty thousand dollars is necessary for heating plant to properly heat the Air Corps technical buildings located at this post. The location of the flying field is so far removed from the post proper that it is impossible to utilize the Fort Leavenworth heating installation. The severity of the winters in this locality required that an adequate heating plant be installed at the flying field.

This completes authorizations for all technical buildings required at this post.

Langley Field, Va.

Hangars	$524,590
Field warehouse	100,000
Headquarters and operations building	80,000
Photo, radio, parachute, and armament buildings	76,000
Central heating plants	100,000
Gas and oil storage system	10,000
Paint, oil, and dope warehouse	5,000
Concrete runways	122,098
Improvement of landing field	85,000
Total	1,102,688

Five hundred twenty-four thousand five hundred and ninety dollars will provide eight new hangars for this station, and $100,000 for the necessary heating installation for technical buildings. The new layout of this field requires the relocation of the hangar line. All existing hangar material will be utilized for construction of additional shops, etc.

The above amount will also provide sufficient funds for the completion of two hangars which are now being erected and appurtenances to seaplane hangar No. 64.

Two permanent warehouses are now available at this field, and, with the $100,000 which is provided above, sufficient Air Corps warehouse space will be provided for the increased size of this command.

There is no permanent photographic building on this field. These activities are now carried on in temporary war-time structures and in a portion of the headquarters building; similarly, in the parachute department no adequate building is now available, this activity being carried on in a temporary building. The radio activity will be so increased in this command as to necessitate an increase in the present installation. The above amount of $76,000 will accommodate these activities as contemplated in the 5-year program.

The present heating plants are of a temporary nature and will be inadequate for the expansion contemplated under the 5-year program. There is no segregated building at this post for the storage of paints, oils, and dopes. These very inflammable materials must be stored in a separate building; therefore, proper storage facilities are required.

One hundred twenty-two thousand and ninety-eight dollars will be required for constructing the necessary runways and warming-up line for the bombardment and pursuit groups which will be located at this station. The location of the brigade at this field has required the relocation of the hangar line which in turn requires a complete new installation of concrete runways.

Eighty-five thousand dollars is required for necessary improvements and extensions to landing field to provide required area for the increased flying activities incident to increased size of this command due to the 5-year program.

This will complete all technical buildings at this station except two hangars and the completion of concrete aprons and warming-up line. The above requirements will be included in a later bill.

Lordsburg, N. Mex.

Operations building	$5,000
Gas and oil storage system	2,821
Total	7,821

This is a border airdrome located on airways route with no buildings other than a hangar. These installations are required for proper servicing of planes and proper operation of airways.

March Field, Riverside, Calif.

Hangars, field shops, and field warehouse	$75,000
Gasoline and oil storage system	10,000
Concrete runways	104,000
Total	189,000

Seventy-five thousand dollars will provide for the necessary increase in size of hangars and for the installation of the necessary ceilings for these buildings, and for the necessary ceilings and partitions in the field shops and field warehouse.

The present system of gas and oil storage is of war-time construction and is inadequate for the contemplated needs of this post; $10,000 will provide an adequate system.

One hundred and four thousand dollars is required for the necessary concrete runways and warming-up line for this new station. No runways exist at the present time for the new hangars. The above funds will complete technical requirements for this field.

Marshall Field, Fort Riley, Kans.

Completion of hangars, shops, and technical buildings	$55,000
Central heating plant	30,000
Total	85,000

Fifty-five thousand dollars is required for necessary increase in bays to accommodate the increased number of planes to be provided this tactical organization and for the necessary installation of fireproof ceilings and for the required heating installation for technical buildings at this post.

Thirty thousand dollars is required for heating plant at this post. With this activity located on a new area of the reservation this new installation will become necessary.

This completes authorizations for all technical buildings required at this post.

Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala.—Air Corps Tactical School

Hangars	$210,500
Field shop	19,000
Field warehouse	60,000
Armament and parachute building	5,000
Concrete runways	50,000
Gas and oil storage system	5,000
Total	349,500

The amount of $210,500 will provide four hangars, which is the number required to house the airplanes allotted for the Air Corps Tactical School, and to complete one hangar for which funds have already been authorized.

Eighty-one thousand dollars is already authorized for Maxwell Field for field shop; $19,000 will be required to complete necessary partitions and ceiling for this building.

One permanent field warehouse is required, and $60,000 will be sufficient to erect this building.

One armament and parachute building: $10,000 nas been authorized for Maxwell Field and an additional $5,000 is required to provide a building of sufficient size to take care of this activity for both the tactical school and the observation squadron.

With the location of the tactical school at Maxwell Field it will be necessary to provide runways and warming-up lines; $50,000 will provide for this requirement.

Five thousand dollars has been provided for gas and oil storage system for the observation squadron at Maxwell Field, and an additional $5,000 is required for Air Corps tactical school at this station.

These funds will complete all technical buildings required at this station with exception of the required heating installation.

Mitchell Field, Long Island, N. Y.

Hangars, field shops, field warehouse	$141,000
Armament and parachute building	5,000
Central heating plants	75,000
Total	221,000

One hundred and forty-one thousand dollars will provide for the necessary increases in the size of hangars for this field and for the installation of permanent fireproof ceilings in these buildings; also for the necessary interior partitions and ceilings for shops and warehouse; also for the necessary heating installations for these buildings.

Ten thousand dollars has been authorized for armament and parachute building and $5,000 will be required to provide adequate space in this building for the size of this command.

The existing heating plants at this post are temporary in nature and inadequate against the severe climatic conditions of this locality. Adequate permanent installations are required; $75,000 will cover this item.

The above funds will complete all technical requirements for this station.

Randolph Field, Tex.

Hangars	$220,000
Field shops	38,000
Concrete runways	232,500
Total	490,500

Two hundred and twenty thousand dollars will be required for the necessary additional bays and fireproof ceilings for these buildings. The increased size of these hangars is incident to increase in number of airplanes to be provided at this station.

Thirty-eight thousand dollars is required for necessary installation of partitions and fireproof ceilings in these new buildings.

Two hundred and thirty-two thousand five hundred dollars is required for necessary concrete runways and warming-up lines for this new station.

The above technical construction will complete the requirements of the first two units for this new station.

Rockwell Field, Calif.

Hangars and field warehouse	$45,000
Field shop	100,000
Construction of concrete runways	50,000
Total	195,000

Forty thousand dollars will be required for additional bays necessary and for fireproof ceilings in the four hangars authorized for construction at this station. The additional number of planes authorized for tactical units require this increase in size of hangars; $5,000 is required for completion of field warehouse for the installation of necessary partitions and fireproof ceiling.

One hundred thousand dollars is required for field shop in order to provide necessary repair and maintenance facilities for this station.

Fifty thousand dollars is required for concrete runways and warming-up lines for this field. There are no runways at this field at the present time.

The above technical buildings will complete those required for the tactical units located at Rockwell Field.

Selfridge Field, Mich.

Hangars and field shop	$122,000
Central heating plants	60,000
Concrete runways	51,000
Total	233,000

One hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars is required to provide additional bays and fireproof ceilings for the six hangars which have been authorized for construction at this station and will provide necessary permanent fireproof ceiling and partitions for field shop building, and will provide necessary heating installation for these buildings.

The heating installations now existing at this post are of a temporary nature and inadequate. The climatic conditions in this locality make it necessary to provide proper heating installations which can be accomplished for $60,000.

Fifty-one thousand dollars is required to provide the necessary concrete runways and warming-up line for this station.

The above funds will complete all technical requirements for this station.

Shreveport, La. (attack wing)

Hangars	$200,000
Field shop	50,000
Field warehouse	45,000
Headquarters and operations buildings	85,000
Radio, parachute, and armament buildings	25,000
Gas and oil storage	10,000
Improvement to landing field	85,000
Total	500,000

This is a new site, and there are no existing buildings available. The above construction will provide sufficient technical buildings for the location of one group of the attack wing at this station. The technical buildings for the second group of this wing will be included in the next fiscal year.

Tucson, Ariz.

Operations building	$5,000
Concrete floor in hangar	1,705
Total	6,705

This is a border airdrome located on airways route, with no buildings other than a hangar. These installations are required for proper servicing of planes and proper operation of airways.

The Senate has also added the items contained in H. R. 16502, which I introduced on January 22, 1929. The bill was favorably reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 2237, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY POSTS IN PORTO RICO

Mr. REECE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 16502):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16502) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts in Porto Rico, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. JAMES, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This is a measure to permit the expenditure of approximately $1,500,000 for construction at military posts in Porto Rico. Gen. Ewing E. Booth, of the War Department, in a statement to the committee explained the necessity for the legislation. He stated the property of the War Department in Porto Rico had been in unsatisfactory condition for some years.

The hurricane which swept over Porto Rico on September 13, 1928, did extensive damage to the Army posts in San Juan and Henry Barracks. Many families of both officers and enlisted men were rendered homeless by the hurricane, and it was necessary to quarter them temporarily with other families in the remaining habitable but overcrowded buildings. As a temporary expedient the companies at Henry Barracks and one company at San Juan are now living under canvas.

Even prior to the date of the hurricane the housing situation at these two Army posts was very unsatisfactory. There was a shortage of permanent shelter. Certain barracks and all but eight officers' quarters and four noncommissioned officers' quarters were entirely inadequate and unsuitable from every point of view. There has already been legislation enacted to begin the housing program at these posts. The bill will provide for the complete repair of the damage sustained at these posts by the hurricane and will also complete the Army housing program in Porto Rico.

The letters of the Secretary of War on the measure are made a part of this report, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit herewith a draft of bill which I request be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law, as follows:

"A bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,471,850, to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts, of such buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows:

"San Juan, P. R.: Barracks, $134,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $89,000; officers' quarters, $296,250; nurses' quarters, $36,000; headquarters building, $20,000; chapel, $20,000; recreation hall, $10,000; storehouse, $15,000; garage and repair shop, $40,000; stables, $40,000; hay and forage shed, $3,000; wagon shed, $6,000; incinerator, $5,000; flagstaff, $500.

"Henry Barracks, Porto Rico: Barracks, $352,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $39,600; officers' quarters, $192,500; hospital, $35,000; stables, $24,000; hay and forage shed, $3,000; wagon shed, $4,000; guardhouse, $10,000; post exchange, $10,000; chapel, $20,000; headquarters building, $15,000; recreation hall, $10,000; storehouse, $15,000; maintenance building, $7,500; fire house, $7,500; bakery, $12,000."

The construction for which authorization is here requested is urgently needed for the proper rehabilitation of the posts of San Juan and Henry Barracks, which suffered extensive damage in the hurricane of September 13, 1928. Even prior to that date the housing situation at these stations was very unsatisfactory. There was a shortage of permanent shelter. Certain barracks and all but eight officers' quarters and four noncommissioned officers' quarters were entirely inadequate and unsuitable from every point of view. As a result of the destruction caused by the hurricane living conditions became deplorable. Many families of both officers and enlisted men were rendered homeless, and it was necessary to quarter them temporarily with other families in the remaining habitable but overcrowded buildings. As a temporary expedient, the companies at Henry Barracks and the service company at San Juan are now living under canvas.

The legislation requested above is to complete the housing of troops stationed in Porto Rico, and does not include any construction now authorized or pending. Therefore the total housing requirements consist of the construction now requested, together with the following items already under congressional consideration.

(a) In the 1930 Budget (authorized in act, Public No. 518, approved April 26, 1928):

Officers' quarters	$140,000
Barracks	10,000

(b) In H. R. 13825 (a pending authorization bill):

Barracks	10,000
Hospital	10,000
Noncommissioned officers' quarters	30,000
Officers' quarters	100,000

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, the following-named officer is designated to appear before your committee: Brig. Gen. W. E. Horton, Quartermaster Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: In connection with my letter of January 18, 1929, submitting the draft of legislation which would authorize appropriations for construction at military posts in Porto Rico, it is desired to invite attention to the following important facts connected therewith:

Should this legislation pass it would not only remedy very unsatisfactory housing conditions for the troops in Porto Rico but would also assist in alleviating the acute economic situation in Porto Rico through the employment of labor and purchase of supplies in connection with the proposed construction.

In this connection it is hoped that consideration will be given this additional reason for the construction as, both from a political and military point of view, it is regarded as of vital importance that the authorization receive favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

The only amendment to this bill (H. R. 16502) made by the Senate is that they omit the word "San Juan" in line 7, page 1, of the bill.

The Senate also added, without amendment, the items contained in H. R. 16355, which I introduced on January 17, 1929. The bill was favorably reported, unanimously, by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 2243, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

APPROPRIATION FOR CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. WAINWRIGHT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 16355.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16355) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. JAMES, having considered the same report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of the bill is clearly set forth in the following letter of the Secretary of War, which is therefore made a part of this report, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I request that legislation reading as follows be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law:

"A bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $220,000 to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Maxwell Field, Ala., barracks, $178,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $42,000.

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $347,536, to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such technical buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Selfridge Field, Mich., improvement of landing field, $125,000; Shreveport, La., improvement of landing field, $50,000; Maxwell Field, Ala., school building, $100,000; Boston Airport, East Boston, Mass., moving and reerecting technical buildings, $15,000; Fort Crockett, Tex., night-flying lighting system, $3,775; runways, $10,775; Hawaiian Department, air bases, $22,000; Chicago Municipal Airport, Chicago, Ill., completion of hangar, $20,986."

This legislation should be enacted into law for the reasons stated in the attached letter addressed to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, as supplemented by the hearings before your committee on January 23, 1929.

If any additional information is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee: Assistant Secretary of War (Mr. Davison); Maj. Gen. J. E. Fechet, Chief of Air Corps; Maj. Rush B. Lincoln, General Staff; Maj. Frank M. Kennedy, Air Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

JANUARY 22, 1929.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR REED: In addition to the amendments to the general housing bill, H. R. 13825, which I requested in my letter of January 5, 1929, I request that the following section be added thereto:

"SEC. —. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $220,000 to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Maxwell Field, Ala., barracks, $178,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $42,000.

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $347,536, to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such technical buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows: Selfridge Field, Mich., improvement of landing field, $120,000; Shreveport, La., improvement of landing field, $50,000; Maxwell Field, Ala., school building, $100,000; Boston Airport, East Boston, Mass., moving and reerecting technical buildings, $15,000; Fort Crockett, Tex., night-flying lighting system, $3,770; runways, $10,775; Hawaiian Department, air bases, $22,000; Chicago Municipal Airport, Chicago, Ill., completion of hangar, $20,926.

The necessity for the above legislation is covered in the following statement:

Selfridge Field

The landing field at this station has always been in bad condition and is getting much worse due to the way in which it was originally constructed. Part of this land was a timbered swamp. When it was originally built during the war the trees were cut down and covered up with dirt. The old logs are rotting, leaving large holes in the field, which cause considerable damage. Part of the field is below the level of the lake and during the spring weather or in heavy rains it becomes covered with water and so saturated with moisture as to prevent flying from the field for periods of from two to four weeks at a time. It is contemplated putting in a complete drainage system which will drain the undersurface water into a large sump, where it will be pumped into the lake. The total cost of this project is estimated to be $175,000, of which $50,000 will be made available in the fiscal year 1930 appropriation bill.

This is in addition to the $230,400 requested in my letter of January 5, 1929, which was to cover the construction of the sea wall and for the necessary fill for improvement of the building area of the field; this amount, $125,000, being required for the drainage system on the flying field.

Shreveport, La.

Improvement of landing field $50,000

Decision has recently been made to transfer the attack wing consisting of an attack group and a pursuit group to Shreveport, La., to be located on approximately 20,000 acres of ground which is to be donated by the citizens of that city. It takes from one to two years to get a turf on a landing field. That part of the donated property which is to be used as a landing field is a series of cotton fields. It is desired to have funds available so that next winter when the cotton crops have been removed the property can be graded and sowed with Bermuda grass and thus permit this grass to grow for about a year or a year and a half before the field is actually in use as a flying station. None of this money will be spent on the property until it has been accepted by the Secretary of War in fee simple and is under the complete ownership of the Government.

Maxwell Field, Ala.

School building	$100,000
Barracks	170,000
Noncommissioned officers' quarters	42,000

Decision has been made to move the Tactical School from Langley Field to Maxwell Field. No school building is available at that station nor is there any other building that can be used for that purpose. It is necessary to expend this sum of money and build a school building for the Tactical School.

There is only one set of barracks at the station, which are now being used by the observation squadron stationed there. It is necessary to have barracks and noncommissioned officers' quarters for the Tactical School detachment which will be moved from Langley Field to Maxwell Field.

Boston Airport, East Boston, Mass.

Moving and reerecting technical buildings $15,000

When the Air Corps established its station at Boston Airport the buildings were erected in the middle of the field. This station has recently been turned over to the city of Boston for development as a municipal airport. This development requires that all buildings be erected on the edge of the field so that the whole of the field can be used in landing and taking off of airplanes. It is necessary for the Air Corps to dismantle its buildings and to reerect these temporary buildings at such site as is mutually agreed upon between the War Department and the municipal airport. These are temporary buildings, but it will cost approximately $15,000 to reerect them.

Fort Crockett, Tex.

Night-flying lighting system $3,775
Runways 10,775

The Air Corps will be compelled to continue its activities at Fort Crockett, Tex., for another four or five years. The tactical operations at this station require that night lighting equipment be made available so that planes can take off and land at night. It is contemplated putting in a minimum amount of equipment, of which about 75 per cent can be salvaged and moved to a new station when Fort Crockett is abandoned.

This station is partly filled ground and is very soggy and wet, resulting in deep holes occurring in the warming-up line from the blasts of the propellers. In order to prevent damage to propellers and tail skids when airplanes are taxiing, it is necessary to establish hard-surfaced warming-up lines and runways at this station.

Hawaiian Department

Establishment of air bases $22,000

The defense system of the Hawaiian Department requires airplanes to operate to and from the various islands of the Hawaiian group. It is necessary that auxiliary landing fields be established at these stations, together with some permanent equipment in the form of a small storage building, etc., to provide for planes when they land at the various islands.

This money is to be expended for developing the three additional air bases required.

Chicago Municipal Airport

Completion of hangar $20,986

In the fiscal year 1928 a hangar was erected at Chicago Municipal Airport for housing planes of the Sixth Corps Area headquarters. The only place available was on leased ground at Chicago Municipal Airport. This hangar was completed as much as possible with the funds available at the time, but it is necessary in order to properly protect planes, equipment, and supplies, to build an office, storeroom, and shops; to ceil the buildings; to complete the floor, which at the present time covers only one-half of the building; to take one end and replace it with a fireproof, hollow-tile wall, and to provide heating equipment for the hangar.

The estimated cost of this was slightly over $23,000 but the amount was reduced to $20,986, and it is believed the work can be accomplished satisfactorily for this sum of money.

These authorizations will not necessitate any immediate appropriation of additional funds as the Appropriation Committee is being requested to enact legislation making available for expenditure for the above purposes and at the above places, the sum of $567,536 by transferring the funds from other appropriations as follows: $230,000 now carried in the fiscal year 1930 War Department appropriation bill for expenditure of Chanute Field, Ill., for barracks, $190,000; officers' quarters, $70,000; $347,536 from the sum of $1,736,619 appropriated by the War Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1929 (Pub. 181, 70th Cong., approved March 23, 1928), for the improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants for the Regular Army, and for such other marking and fuel-supply stations and temporary shelter as may be necessary. This will be in lieu of the following items included thereunder, which are not considered to be urgent this year and some of which will not be required for reappropriation. The following are the items, with explanation of each:

Fort Crockett, Tex.

Dope and paint house and lean-to for boiler room $10,775

At the time the estimates were made for this item it was considered that the dope and paint house would be urgently needed at that station. Since that time conditions at the field have made it more advisable to spend this amount of money on hard-surfaced warming-up lines in front of the hangars. The work that would be carried on in this building if it were constructed can, to a large extent, be carried on in the new aero-repair building being constructed at Fort Crockett or at the nearest depot. Serious damage is occurring to planes at Fort Crockett as a result of the failure to have hard-surfaced runways to warm up the engines and to taxi the plane along.

No request will be made for reappropriation of this amount for the dope and paint shop at Fort Crockett, Tex.

Hawaiian Department

Steel hangar $39,500

This hangar was scheduled for erection at Luke Field. Due to the probability that the Air Corps will move its activities to the new site known as "Tracts A and B," reducing the hangar requirements at Luke Field. It is not considered advisable or necessary to erect permanent buildings at this station.

It is not believed that it will ever be necessary to ask for a reappropriation of this item for a hangar at Luke Field.

Middletown Air Depot

Concrete floors in warehouse $38,500

The latest plans for construction at Middletown Air Depot do not require the use of this warehouse in such a manner as to need concrete floors.

It is not contemplated that it will be necessary to ask for a reappropriation of those funds.

San Antonio Air Depot

Instrument house, engine repair, and cleaning building $5,497

This is a building that was constructed from funds fiscal year 1928.

It will not be necessary to ask for reappropriation of these funds.

Selfridge Field

Ceiling and walling hangars $3,264

These funds are not needed at the present time at Selfridge Field and reappropriation will not be requested.

Hangars $185,000

Two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars is now appropriated for construction of hangars at Selfridge Field. The hangars now in existence at that station it is believed can be kept in service another four or five years and it is more advisable to use these funds for purposes specified in attached authorization bill.

It will be necessary to later request a reappropriation of this amount in order to build the hangars required at that station to replace the old temporary buildings now in existence there.

March Field

Radio and school building $80,000

The radio building was constructed from funds available in fiscal year 1928. The location of the school at March Field is temporary and will eventually be moved to Randolph Field. The construction of a school building is not needed.

Night-flying lighting system $15,000

This item was constructed from funds available in fiscal year 1928.

It will not be necessary to request the reappropriation of the above amounts for March Field.

Chanute Field

Barracks $150,000
Officers' quarters 70,000

The above amounts are included in the estimates of the War Department for fiscal year 1930. The question of retaining the technical school at Chanute Field has not been decided, but is held in abeyance until after the completion of the 5-year building program. Until such decision is made this office recommends that permanent construction of this sort be not initiated at Chanute Field. The money is very much needed at Maxwell Field in order to provide barracks and noncommissioned officers' quarters for the personnel of the tactical school, which is scheduled to be moved to Maxwell Field as soon after July 1, 1929, as housing construction can be provided.

These funds would have to be appropriated for the tactical school, whether it remains at Langley Field or is moved to Maxwell Field, and reappropriation will be required for the technical school at Chanute Field, or such other station as it will be eventually placed when this decision has been made.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee: Maj. Gen. J. E. Fecket, Chief of Air Corps; Brig. Gen. William E. Horton, assistant to the Quartermaster General.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

The Senate also added, without amendment, the item in H. R. 13931, which I introduced on May 21, 1928, and which was favorably reported, unanimously, by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 18, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 2138, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

BUILDING FOR RADIO AND COMMUNICATION CENTER, BOLLING FIELD, D. C.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 13931:

The Committee on Military Affairs to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C., having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Page 1, line 6, change the period to a comma and add "or at a point on a military reservation in the vicinity of the District of Columbia to be selected by the Secretary of War."

The reason for the enactment of this legislation, as amended by the committee, is set forth in detail in the following letters from the Secretary of War, which are attached hereto and made a part of this report, as follows:

DECEMBER 8, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: On May 15, 1928, I forwarded a draft of the following bill and requested that it be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law:

"A bill to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $30,000, to be expended for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C."

My former letter explained the need of such a building, but as a result of further study and new developments in the way of antennae of a type which would be classed as flying hazards it is no longer deemed desirable to erect this building at Bolling Field, as Fort Myer or some other military reservation near the District of Columbia is believed to be more desirable.

In view of these changed conditions it is now requested that the bill in question be amended by your committee, in whose hands it now is, to read as follows:

"A bill to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $30,000, to be expended for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C., or at a point on a military reservation in the vicinity of the District of Columbia to be selected by the Secretary of War."

A similar letter and request has been addressed to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

MAY 15, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit herewith the following draft of a bill which I request be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law:

"A bill to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $30,000, to be expended for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C."

At present the lack of sufficient space at a central point necessitates the location of radio transmitters of the War Department at four points, viz, Annapolis, Md.; Arlington, Va.; Washington Barracks, D. C.; Washington Navy Yard. Two additional high-frequency radio transmitters will also have to be cared for by August, 1929. Additional housing facilities will be necessary as there is not sufficient space for their installation, nor is there a suitable building at any of the above-mentioned points in which adequate accommodations can be provided.

It is desired to centralize in this proposed building all radio transmitters and communication installations of the Signal Corps and the Air Corps in the District of Columbia. By centralization it will reduce the expense for control lines and the maintenance personnel will be reduced from 18 to 3 men.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officer is designated to appear before your committee: Lieut. Col. J. E. Hemphill, Signal Corps.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

A similar letter has been addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

The Senate also added, without amendment, the item in H. R. 14155, which I introduced on December 3, 1928, reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on December 11, 1928, and passed the House unanimously on January 7, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1942, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

APPROPRIATION FOR CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 14155):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14155) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of this measure, introduced by Mr. JAMES, is explained in the letter of the Secretary of War, which is made a part of this report, as follows:

NOVEMBER 8, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: I submit herewith draft of bill which I request be introduced in the House of Representatives and enacted into law, as follows:

"A bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $49,000 for the construction and installation in the Philippine Department of a signal depot warehouse, with such utilities and appurtenances thereto as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary."

There are no provisions of existing law applicable to this bill.

A signal depot is badly needed at Manila to serve the Philippine Department. Signal Corps equipment of great value is now scattered through six old buildings, entirely inadequate and unsuitable for the purpose. This equipment is of a delicate nature, expensive in character, and susceptible to rapid deterioration in a tropical climate. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that it be properly protected from the elements.

It is estimated that the total cost of the bill will not exceed $49,000.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officer is designated to appear before your committee: Maj. Gen. George S. Gibbs, chief signal officer.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

A similar letter has been addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. B. ROBBINS,
Acting Secretary of War.

The Senate also added, without amendment, the item contained in H. R. 13693, introduced by Mr. DREWRY on May 11, 1928, favorably reported to the House by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 18, 1929, and passed the House unanimously on February 4, 1929.

The report reads as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 2137, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

TRANSFER PORTION OF CAMP LEE MILITARY RESERVATION TO PETERSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 13693):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13693) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer a portion of the Camp Lee Military Reservation to the Petersburg National Military Park, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

The reason for the enactment of this legislation is set forth in detail in the favorable report of the War Department; therefore that report is made a part of this report, as follows:

MAY 25, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: In compliance with your request of May 14, 1928, I am pleased to submit the following report on H. R. 13693:

The subject of the proposed legislation is to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer a portion of the Camp Lee Military Reservation to the Petersburg National Military Park.

The applicable provision of existing law on this subject appears in act approved July 3, 1926 (Public 467, 69th Cong.), H. R. 7817 (44 Stat. 822), which act establishes a national military park at the battle fields of the siege of Petersburg, Va. No changes will be brought about in existing law by the proposed legislation.

The purpose of the legislation is to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to the Petersburg National Military Park portions of the Camp Lee Military Reservation as, in his discretion, are of such historical and military importance as to warrant their preservation by inclusion in the national military park. A preliminary study indicates that two of the most important historical points in the Campaign of Petersburg are located on the Camp Lee Military Reservation. The metes and bounds of the areas which should be transferred can not be accurately determined without a detailed survey and further historical research.

The War Department has requested Congress to enact legislation authorizing the sale of the Camp Lee Military Reservation when no longer needed for military purposes. I understand that H. R. 11953, a bill to accomplish that purpose, passed the House of Representatives on May 7, 1928, and has been referred to the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate. I do not believe that the transfer of such portions of Camp Lee as may be required in connection with the establishment of the park would materially reduce the value of the property as a whole, but, on the other hand, might result in an increase in the value of lands adjoining the areas included in the park. If these tracts are allowed to pass into private hands it is very probable that such earthworks and trenches as still exist would be destroyed.

For the foregoing reason I recommend the passage of H. R. 13693.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officer is designated to appear before your committee: Brig. Gen. William E. Horton, Quartermaster Corps.

Sincerely yours, DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

The new items added by the Senate are as follows:

Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia: Observation, tuberculosis, and infectious disease wards, and a laboratory and morgue, and the reconstruction of the third floor of the main building into an operating room, and for the necessary corridors, roads, walks, grading, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, $90,000; chapel, $12,000.

Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.: Officers' quarters, $112,000; barracks, $40,000.

The items for Walter Reed Hospital were added at the request of the Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, as per letter written to Senator REED, which reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 17, 1929.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR REED: In addition to the amendments to the general housing bill (H. R. 13825), which I requested in my letter of January 5, 1929, and the additional amendment pertaining to Air Corps stations requested in subsequent letter, I request that there be added at the end of section 1 of that bill as part of the item pertaining to Walter Reed General Hospital which now reads, "Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia: Nurses' quarters, $300,000," add "observation, tuberculosis, and infectious-disease wards and a laboratory and morgue and the reconstruction of the third floor of the main building into an operating room, and for the necessary corridors, roads, walks, grading, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, $90,000."

The necessity for the increase of $90,000 over the appropriations already made for this construction is that the lowest bid for the work was $1,098,595, while the balance available is only $1,066,880, which deficit will require $31,715 more before the contract can be let for the work.

In addition to the $31,715 the further sum of $58,285 will be required for the payment of salaries, and cost of inspection $15,000; miscellaneous items of work, including replacement of utilities connecting up new with old work, $20,000, and contingencies, $23,285. The small sum of only 2 per cent of the amount involved is set aside for contingencies which is considered none too large, particularly as the remodeling of the existing main building will be included in the contract and it is impossible to make an accurate estimate in advance of what conditions will be found when the old existing installations are torn out.

If any further information from the War Department is desired by your committee I shall be pleased to furnish it.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings on the proposed legislation, I have designated Maj. Gen. Merritte W. Ireland, Surgeon General, and Col. Louis H. Bash, Quartermaster Corps, to appear before your committee.

The proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget who advises that it is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

The reason for the addition of the items for Fort D. A. Russell are, according to the Senate report on the bill, as follows:

FORT D. A. RUSSELL, WYO.

The authorization for appropriation of $112,000 for officers' quarters is considered necessary due to the fact that it is apparent that there are not now sufficient quarters to accommodate the officers authorized for this post. Of 133 officers authorized, there is a general average of 17 bachelor officers for whom quarters are available, leaving 116 married officers to be accommodated in 107 sets of quarters available. It is proposed to build two 2-story brick officers' 4-set apartments.

A new barrack building is believed necessary at this post due to the very crowded conditions existing, Companies I and L of the Twentieth Infantry being superimposed on Companies K and M, respectively, of the same regiment, as well as the Quartermaster detachment on Service Company, First Infantry, and the Headquarters Company, Fourth Brigade on Company F, First Infantry.

When the bill was before the Senate on February 9, 1929, the following item was added upon amendment of Senator CARL HAYDEN, of Arizona:

Yuma $5,000

The reason given by Senator HAYDEN is as follows (p. 3274, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 9, 1929):

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1926, there has been set aside near Yuma, Ariz., 160 acres of land for an aviation field, but there is no building upon it. The land was reserved with the understanding that the field was to be leveled and made available for use by the board of supervisors of Yuma County. The act provides that the air port is reserved for use by the War Department at any time. I visited that field last summer and it is now a bare, level piece of ground entirely suitable for aviation purposes. Yuma is halfway between Tucson and Los Angeles and military airplanes frequently stop there. Authorization should be made for the construction of a building at a limit of cost of $5,000.

I ask to include as a part of my remarks a copy of the act to which I have referred, and direct particular attention to the last paragraph thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public, No. 314, 69th Cong.]

An act (H. R. 7911) to authorize the exchange of certain public lands and the establishment of an aviation field near Yuma, Ariz.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order that the entire southeast quarter of section 9, township 9, south of range 23, west of the Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, may be reserved for a public aviation field, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue unrestricted patent for any public land in said section 9 in exchange for the east half of the southeast quarter and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section 9.

SEC. 2. That upon the exchange being completed, the entire southeast quarter of said section 9 shall be reserved as a public field for the landing and taking off of aircraft of all descriptions: Provided, That the board of supervisors of Yuma County, Ariz., shall by resolution agree to assume the expense of clearing and maintaining the field, and that the following conditions are agreed to:

That operators of Government-owned aircraft shall always have free and unrestricted use of said field; that rules and regulations governing the operation of aircraft upon said field shall include and coincide with rules and regulations prescribed and promulgated by the War Department; that Government departments and agencies operating aircraft shall have the right to erect and install upon said land such structures and improvements as the heads of such departments and agencies may deem advisable, including facilities for maintaining supplies of fuel, oil, and other materials for operating aircraft; that in case of emergency, or in the event that it shall be deemed advisable by the Secretary of War, the War Department may assume absolute control of the management and operation of said field.

Approved May 29, 1926.

PENSIONS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16522) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and so forth, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

MRS. MYRTLE BROWN SHELY

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I present a privileged resolution from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mrs. Myrtle Brown Shely, widow of James W. Shely, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to six months' compensation and an additional amount not exceeding $250 to defray funeral expenses and last illness of the said James W. Shely.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN M'LANE

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 309

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mary McLane, dependent sister of John McLane, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to six months' salary and an additional sum of $250 to cover the funeral expenses and the expenses of his last illness.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. MILLER

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 282

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Paul L. Miller, son of William H. Miller, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to six months' compensation and an additional amount not exceeding $250 to defray funeral expenses and last illness of the said William H. Miller.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN C. BURNS

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a further privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 306

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Lillian Burns, widow of John C. Burns, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to six months' salary and an additional sum of $250 to cover the funeral expenses and the expenses of his last illness.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On February 5, 1929:

H. R. 14920. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Wisconsin to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Rock River at or near Center Avenue, Janesville, Rock County, Wis.;

On February 6, 1929:

H. R. 6864. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to require steamship companies to carry the mail when tendered; and

H. R. 12404. An act authorizing erection of a memorial to Maj. Gen. Henry A. Greene at Fort Lewis, Wash.

On February 7, 1929:

H. R. 12113. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor lands on the public domain also within such State; and

H. R. 13507. An act to amend section 3 of Public Act No. 230 (37 Stat. L. p. 194).

On February 8, 1929:

H. R. 7200. An act to amend section 321 of the Penal Code; and

H. R. 14151. An act to provide for establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near the mouth of the Quillayute River in the State of Washington.

On February 9, 1929:

H. R. 10774. An act for the relief of the Carlisle Commission Co.; and

H. R. 16035. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across Port Washington Narrows, within the city of Bremerton, State of Washington.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a speech by Emanuel Hertz on Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following speech:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN—LET HIS CONTEMPORARIES TESTIFY

By Emanuel Hertz

Has it ever occurred to historians of the Civil War period what might have happened in that crucial epoch if certain events had not transpired, if certain policies had not been pursued by the Southern States, if certain of their leaders had decided upon different courses? What would have happened if there had been no secession and the southern legislators elected to the Federal Congress had remained in their posts in the Senate and House of Representatives, determined more than ever to continue the fight in the same forum—always in accordance with law? What would have happened if Robert E. Lee had accepted the tendered commission of becoming commander in chief of the Federal Armies? What would have happened if South Carolina had just simply ignored Major Anderson at Fort Sumter instead of opening fire and thus making a military hero and martyr out of him?

What, in short, would have happened if the South had said, as she might have: "The electorate has spoken, Lincoln is President. We agree. But we elected a practically unanimous delegation to the Senate and House of Representatives. Our governors are Democrats and champions of State's rights, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and a majority of the occupants of that bench sympathize with the South. Let us wait and see how President Lincoln will hold to his oath just registered, to support the Constitution. The Democratic Senators and Congressmen from the North and our Representatives in both Houses will easily outvote any measure which looks to war between the sections—that must not be."

In the final analysis it is the House of Representatives which declares war, which votes supplies and appropriations to maintain the Government, to maintain an army and navy. Lincoln's Cabinet, too, as constructed, could have been relied upon to advocate the maintenance of the status quo. The money power, the bankers, the merchants, the manufacturers, too, would have been slow to advocate and support war, or any measure that might lead to war. And what is more, the slim phalanx in Congress, which half-heartedly supported Lincoln in 1861, was almost completely wiped out in the election of 1862. Has it ever occurred to anyone what would have been the result of this stalemate? How would Lincoln have proceeded to put in force his plans for gradual emancipation? Stephens, Jefferson Davis, Benjamin, Yancey, and a host of other southern leaders, all able and resourceful legislators and jurists, would have talked any such plan to death and the Supreme Court would have stood by them, if any radical legislation had been attempted.

Had Lincoln tried to appoint new judges in order to procure a reargument and a modification, when death or resignation created a vacancy, the Senate could have certainly defeated any candidate but a choice satisfactory to them. Chase certainly would have never been confirmed. The Southern States could have proceeded with any peaceful program they desired, and how could anyone have interfered with them? In the meanwhile they could have solidified their hostile factions never too far apart on any vital question; they could have controlled the admission of new States; they could have carved 10 more States out of what is now Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

What would have happened if Lee had accepted the commission tendered him by Lincoln? If he had had the vision to decide as did General Thomas, for example, also a Virginian and as able a soldier as either side produced, the charge of incompetence which resulted in the dismissal of McClellan, Burnside, and Hooker, and others, could certainly never have been brought against him. He would have remained. His theory of war, his genius as a strategist might have ended all opposition promptly. His views might have prevailed with the South—long before emancipation matured or was even thought of—or deemed feasible. Lincoln would have been in a blind alley once more—his great talents, his abundant abilities would have never come to fruition. With peace promptly restored on almost any terms, the problems of slavery would have hardly interfered with the restoration of peace in the Union. It was Lincoln's paramount duty to save the Union, so he said, and in a manner which permitted of no qualification. If he had saved it Lee, not Lincoln, would have been elected in 1864, and would have been groomed for the Presidency two years before election, and in the interim would have paralyzed all of Lincoln's efforts to alleviate the condition of the slave.

Up to that time a vast majority were concerned solely with the maintenance of the Union. What, with men like Stonewall Jackson and Stephens and the Johnstons and Lee in places of power, could the small group of Abolitionists and Republicans have accomplished against such an unconquerable phalanx of legislators from the South, aided by men like Seymour and Greeley and Vallandigham and Robert C. Winthrop from the North—to mention but a few—and then Douglas, the noblest Roman of them all, might have survived and might have again been the leader.

In the meanwhile, the small Army and negligible Navy would have remained small and negligible. And the urge for peace, the longing for continued prosperity would have prevented and made ridiculous the continuation of the abolitionist propaganda. An entire world, up to that moment, looked on askance and could have said: "We have given Lincoln and his associates every opportunity to put their promises, contained in their platform, into practice. What have they done? Why continue them in office when the historic party of Jefferson and of Jackson is ready and willing and able—as she has often demonstrated—to lead the Government along the paths of peace? Out with these adventurers, these makers of empty promises which were never intended to be kept and which we now see were made knowing that they could not be kept or performed."

And in the interim, an impatient electorate would have been impatiently waiting for Lincoln's next move. The crowd, often called the people, want action after a new inauguration and they want it speedily—or they lose faith. They want something more than merely the change in the personnel of the officeholders.

What about Lincoln's solution of the "house divided" doctrine? How is the Supreme Court to be coerced into changing its position in the Dred Scott case? What has become of the "irrepressible conflict" of which Seward had so much to say? Was it all for the purpose of turning out the harmless Buchanan administration? Was it all for the purpose of transferring Lincoln from Springfield to Washington? And yet, just that would have happened if the South had simply watched and waited and simply countered every move by legal and constitutional means.

History would have but repeated itself. After a period of discussion of some 20 years the people became tired and submitted to the compromise of 1850. Now, after an even more tiresome discussion and hotly contested elections of 1856 and 1860, they would have gladly submitted to any reasonable compromise, and Lincoln and Seward and all the rest with them would have been swept from their moorings. It is true what we now good-naturedly call the uncompromising reformers would have continued to agitate, but they would have had but little success with the leaders of the Republican Party definitely arrayed against them.

These and many more possibilities—and they were more than possibilities—would have been definitely in the way of emancipation or even of the slightest modification of the status of the slave. And Lincoln's position in Washington, with the country, with the Republican Party, with his own followers in the North, would have become impossible and untenable. It was well-nigh intolerable as it was, in spite of all these blunders on the part of the South. The load and burden he bore during the war would have been as nothing compared to the impasse with which he would have been confronted had the South not been the impatient aggressor, had the South stuck to its guns under the Constitution, had they resorted to and relied on this course for the maintenance of their rights and the preservation of the legislation then on the statue books. Strange that this plausible hypothesis has received so little attention from anyone; all assume that what happened was the only thing that could have happened. But such a theory assumes the total absence of a well-organized party in the South and outside of South Carolina—in almost every State—to maintain the Union at all hazards.

It is only after this theory is developed and well thought out—and followed out to its ultimate results—that we begin to understand what was going on in Lincoln's mind from that fateful election day in November until the hour of his inauguration. Every moment was fraught with strange possibilities. He knew the men and measures of the southern leaders. He had read and studied and mastered all they said. He corresponded with some of them and attempted to influence them; read his correspondence with Alexander H. Stephens—easily the foremost man in the South. He had tried to ascertain whither they were drifting, what was in prospect, and how he could meet any and all emergencies. He corresponded with his few friends in Washington—in the Senate, in the House of Representatives—and warned against hasty legislation which was prepared to sacrifice all that had been won, intended to conciliate the South.

What went on in his mind no one knew. He confided in no one. He walked in silence; he thought out these problems in his own way. He learned gradually what sort of men had come to the surface on this wave of Republican victories in the Northern States. He conferred with some of them: Weed, Seward, Curtin, Trumbull, Chase, Morton, Arnold, Washburn, Andrew, Todd, and a few others—most of them either skeptical or openly hostile; some few loyal—with all these he spoke and took their measure and tried to allocate all these into his scheme of coping with the impending emergency, whatever it should turn out to be.

He continued to read the leading southern papers in order to be prepared if the threats made should be carried out; he continued to keep himself informed in order to anticipate rashness and attempt to frustrate it, by what he said in his inaugural.

Was ever any other similar address awaited like this one? Was ever so much dependent on an inaugural as was on this one? Was ever ruler of a great people placed in a similar fateful position as was Lincoln on that day? He suddenly appeared in Washington. "The President in mufti," shouted his enemies. He paid no attention to this outcry. He was not going to confuse and divert the issues more than they were, by inviting a riot on his passage through hostile territory. As he subsequently said, "One war at a time," he now said, "One problem at a time."

He was in Washington some days before inauguration. And what happened? One would imagine that everyone who came near him counseled him to be firm, to do all he could for the preservation of the Union. Nothing could be further from the fact. Delegation after delegation which called on him advised and urged either peace at any price or the making of cowardly and disgraceful terms with the southern leaders who were bent on the dissolution of the Union. Most of the prominent men had some hostile criticism to make. To some his advent to Washington was disgraceful, undignified; to others his personal appearance was objectionable. They did not like his clothes, his yarns, his manner of speech. To still others his refusal to heed advice on appointments and the prompt announcement of policy were a cause of bitter complaint. Wendell Phillips expected him to free the slaves as his first official act, and denounced him for not doing so, even more bitterly than the leaders of the South did for his belief in ultimate extinction of their peculiar institution.

The question which presents itself at this late day is, How many friends did Lincoln really have when he reached Washington? How many of that great throng cared for him or for his policies as announced on this inauguration day of 1861? How many on the platform surrounding him—with the exception of Douglas, who loyally placed himself at Lincoln's disposal, David Davis, and a few others—were there rallying around him on whom this new President could lean and rely? Every report of the time to be found in biography, autobiography, letter, or speech began with the familiar legend how all were disappointed with his appearance, his bearing, his conversation, his reception; and then the whole feminine world was bent on teaching Mary Todd, his wife, that there was no place for her in aristocratic circles in Washington, then, as now, a southern city with a southern background. Even the foreign representatives and newspapermen found very little which they could admire. Sneering at the Lincolns was the order of the day. And sneer they did, as their journals testify to this very day. Some of them, like the Prince of Wales, were witnessing what they believed was the dissolution of the Union.

And Lincoln was never more alone than during these first weeks in Washington. True, the candidates for office were there—this line, unending, was always in evidence and simply helped to wear out the giant frame of the sad President. Even Seward, on whom he began to lean, even Seward lost faith in Lincoln, and within a month after the inauguration wrote the foolish memorandum—first about bringing on a universal war and then the one about supplanting him. Another man of smaller mental caliber would have crushed Seward by publishing either or both of these peculiar state papers, but not so Lincoln. His plans were mature, and this little-statured man, who had many good qualities and had a great following, was needed in his plan to save the Union. So Lincoln declined to notice the insult and pocketed the disloyal screeds of his premier—premier in name only, for on every important occasion Lincoln was his own foreign secretary, his own premier.

Who but Lincoln would have tolerated the open hostility and arrogance of a Chase, the almost coarse treatment of Stanton, or the open and studied insolence of a McClellan? Who but Lincoln would have endured the condescending demeanor of a Sumner, the haughty manner of Thad Stephens? A President in our own day made short shrift of similar and far more able opponents in his party. No other man could have tolerated a Cabinet so unruly, so critical, so contemptuous of their leader as did Lincoln. Cabinets, with few exceptions, have been harmonious political families, chosen for the purpose of carrying out the policies of their leader. A Jefferson would resign because of a clash with Hamilton, and the older Adams would dismiss a number of disloyal members, a Wilson would unceremoniously dismiss a Lansing, but that was all. It remained for Lincoln, in addition to all other troubles he had, to have imposed upon himself by conditions which even he could not control, the most arrogant Cabinet in the history of the Presidency. And yet this was the only Cabinet possible for the time being. In 1864 he could accept the oft-tendered resignation of Chase and replace him with Fessenden; but that was impossible at the outset of his administration.

Given this situation, which confronted Lincoln from all sides—at home and abroad, in the South as well as in the North, for his political opponents never for a moment stopped plotting and scheming and planning his downfall—and add to this the situation in his Cabinet, his own official family; and take up the entire list of historians who on top of all this attempt to belittle him and his achievement. The book called the Real Lincoln, the best exponent of this class of detracting and destructive criticism, has gone through many editions; and as the printed word, particularly in book form, earnestly and plausibly advanced, has considerable influence, why is it not time for some definite steps to be taken in order that the whole unvarnished truth be told at last?

The ordinary biography will not do. Before we reach the meat of the matter, before the climax of that great life is reached, we become exhausted with a wilderness of useless facts and deductions as to his genealogy—the wanderings and rovings of his pioneer ancestors. We are called upon to study the names, the lives, the tribulations of seven generations of Lincolns, from the day they left England until Abraham opened his law office in Springfield. And then follows the minute history of his law practice, his partners, his clients, his clerks, his trials, his trips on the circuit, a perfect Odyssey of frontier and pioneer experiences which slowly came through his law office.

Humanity owes as much to Lincoln as it does to Napoleon, or to any of the much-described and documented earls and dukes and kings of England—certainly as much as to Frederick the Great of Prussia or Peter the Great of Russia—both called great for different reasons than the reason we call Lincoln great. We have a sympathetic and systematic life of Napoleon—Professor Masson's great series is a monument of historical research, and it is but one of a series of similar works about the Little Corporal. Would anyone care to see and read of Napoleon's campaigns, the works are here in abundance. Would anyone care to make a study of Napoleon and his marshals, the proper works are on hand, and any library is supplied with all you care to see. Napoleon, the legislator and the protagonist of the Code Napoleon, it is to be had. Even his private life, the medallic and the pictorial life, and the thousand and one occasions in his hectic existence, down to The Last Phase, by Lord Rosebery, have been meticulously gathered and accumulated, described, and preserved. Even his final resting place is the glory of France—lovingly prepared and given by an adoring country. And what did he bring France, besides tears and ruin?

What a contrast is our attitude toward Lincoln—from the moment when all that was earthly of him was confined to mother earth in Springfield our treatment of him has been shameful. The grotesque monument which finally, after scandalous failures, was reared over his grave, was the result of procrastination and delay, which was a disgrace to his State and a profanation of his name. His place in history, his biographers, his historians, his monographers, have been about as successful as have those who undertook to rear his monument in Springfield. Of course, our generation has begun to atone for the long neglect, thanks to St. Gaudens and his school of sculptors, and Healey and the new school of painters, of etchers, of engravers, and of photographers and others.

But on the historical and literary side the work has remained undone, or at best only partly done, and all that is done is done in a hurry. Here and there a publisher wants a book on Lincoln, and the manuscript must be in the publisher's hands by such and such a day. How unfair, how unscientific, how unworthy of that great name! One is constantly pestered with the question, "What is a good life of Lincoln?" Those who really know something of the problem can not answer. There is no definitive life of Lincoln, either short or long. One is a wilderness of historical facts, the history of battles and campaigns of the Civil War, covering the entire period and incidentally connecting Lincoln with some of the facts, and that imperfectly and inadequately. The others are briefed upon facts prepared by others or are a condensation or rehashing of so-called existing biographies or works dealing with certain phases of Lincoln or events of the period, with a little eulogy thrown in. At best we must suggest to those who are interested certain works covering certain periods, and even those are few, inept, and incomplete.

The great Lincoln-Douglas joint debate—a unique event in our democracy—has never received full and adequate treatment to this very day; the Lincoln administration, his great adventure, has not yet found its historian. Lincoln's diplomacy has remained a sealed book; Lincoln's influence on the military conduct of the Civil War has not been written, and was for the first time touched upon by two English military men—Generals Ballard and Maurice. Lincoln and his two Congresses is an interesting subject to be written by some one who cares to read the Congressional Globe and the lives and works of the legislators of the period. Lincoln's letters have never been gathered and properly treated, aside from two or three which have been fairly worn to tatters by oft-repeated and much quotation. And Lincoln wrote more than these two or three so constantly quoted.

And so we might go on throughout the entire life of this strange being and always find ourselves at the end of the path—undiscovered, unexplored, unfamiliar beyond a certain point.

It goes without saying that the man who appeared in Washington in March, 1861, ready to take the presidential oath of office, was no ordinary man. No other Chief Executive who came from the governor's office of his native State, from the Speaker's chair, or from the Senate was ever better prepared than was Lincoln to assume the burdens of his office. No man, before or after him, simplified his task and stripped from it all misleading entanglements as did Lincoln. He had but one problem, and that was to maintain and preserve the Union. All else was secondary and of minor importance. He knew that governments are conducted by a hierarchy of inherited undersecretaries, experts, bookkeepers, paymasters, statisticians, and abided by that. He himself only had one absorbing problem. That one problem with him had been uppermost in his mind for 20 years. He had studied it in all its many hues and phases and came to a definite conclusion. His philosophy and utterances on the subject of 1848 and 1858 and 1864 were the same. On that subject he never changed.

On the other hand he had acquainted himself with all the available literature on the subject of how our Constitution was evolved and finally framed, how our Union was born, how the States were hedged in and protected and formed into one indissoluble, indestructible Union—peopled by a free and independent citizenry—with some who were not free at the time but were ultimately to become free—as he demonstrated that slavery in a civilized, God-fearing country was doomed to ultimate extinction. Law, religion, honesty, decency, fair dealing, were against perpetuation of the hateful institution. He did not permit himself to be deflected from his course, either by idealist, by politician, by dreamer, by secessionist. He reasoned out his philosophy of life—demonstrated its soundness, defended it from every stage and rostrum for 30 years—and when called to the position of power, was ready to enforce it. No one after 1858 ever attempted to convince Lincoln of the error of his theory. No such attempt is recorded. No one denied his conclusions or their soundness; attempts were made to prevent their execution and enforcement—by methods which resulted in war. But those who brought on the war admired his fortitude, his fairness, his leadership. Read, among others, Judah P. Benjamin's scathing contrast of the courage of Lincoln and of the mental gymnastic of the shifting Douglas. His utterances were quoted as perfect specimens of reasoning and perfect diction.

And yet this man was alone. He was ever forcing the hands of the time server, of the charlatan, of the misinformed. And with such material he was compelled to build the mental catapult which was to destroy treason. For it was the idea behind the Army, not the Army itself, which conquered treason. With such sides he was forced to organize an army and build a navy, everyone questioning, doubting, criticising, faultfinding, hampering.

This great mind broke down all opposition and called into being a great army and giant navy. He did have the loyal assistance of Welles and Fox, and with a patience and a vision almost akin to divination he marshaled about him a military organization which carried his matures plans into execution. This Army and Navy demonstrated to a doubting world that Lincoln's statement was true, that this Union is one, that slavery was doomed to ultimate extinction, that all men were created equal—others talked and dreamed and hoped—and Lincoln, in the face of difficulties that never confronted another ruler, carried these ideas into execution and embedded them in the rock of the Constitution, always instrumental in admitting and reconstructing the additional States needed for ratification of the constitutional amendments. And while doing this one need not imagine that the foreign affairs of the Nation had not his closest attention; that he had delegated the feeding and clothing, of munitioning his Army and recasting his Navy to others. No! No! A thousand times no! He himself superintended Seward's work and guided his pen when world-war encirclement threatened the Union, and when the two or three important diplomatic events cropped up in the foreign office; Stanton was hardly ever rid of his perpetual companion and visitor in the War Office—ever reading dispatches, ever sending dispatches, ever guiding spineless commanders, ever discovering brilliant soldiers, captains, generals, and instantly replacing the halt, the lame, the decrepit, the stupid, by the newly discovered soldier who fights. Oh, what a really great work can be written of Lincoln in the War Office, Lincoln in the hospitals, Lincoln and the war correspondents, Lincoln and his secretaries, and Lincoln and his telegraphers. And who but Lincoln was called upon by the Attorney General, when momentous questions came up for argument and decision? The question of habeas corpus, or the usurpation by generals in the field of powers belonging to the President? Who but Lincoln was ever called upon to unravel and disentangle the troublesome questions before Congress? He was watching every wheel, every piston, every cog in the complicated machinery of government, and succeeded and did this work in a manner as though that was all he was called upon to do.

He was his own publicity department. Greeley and Bennett, and Medill and Weed, and the other newspapermen of his day, came to do his bidding, as did Stanton and Seward and Welles. A hostile press was transformed at the end into a mighty instrument for good, and carried out Lincoln's purposes. Practically all the great newspapers of the day had become Lincoln organs of publicity.

He was his own contact man with the pulpits of every denomination. He never named one class of preachers or spiritual leaders, but mentioned all the others—the Methodists were most numerous and therefore did most, but so did all the others in proportion to their numbers. The different nationalities who had just come to these shores received the same generous treatment at his hands; he overlooked no one class of citizens—the Irish, the German, the Hungarian, the Slav—he needed them all. And doing all these things, this one solitary individual in the White House was kept busy beyond endurance by thousands of problems of every conceivable nature—an entire saga, an epic, with thousands of cantos, can and will some day be written about his dealings with his fellow man, with the soldier, with his mother, with the wife, the sister, and with all who came within his ken—for the thousands of acts of charity, of mercy, and of help to his fellow man. I know no man in our, or in any other history, who has displayed such amazing vision in dealing with many stupendous and wholly novel problems vital to the endurance of the Union; nor do I know of any other leader who, possessing the idealism of Lincoln, has also had his power of translating ideals into successful practice.

Is the life and are the acts and achievements of this colossus in human form to be condensed into so many pages? Are they to be condensed into so many volumes? Justice, history cry out against such a procedure. An entire world demands all, wants to know all that made up the achievements of this man of destiny, this advocate who practiced for 20 years, who thought and prepared and wrote the epic of the Union, who fought for it, who won its birthright and established it for all time to come, who committed to paper and into the State papers of the Union more wisdom, more genuine philosophy of life than any other American. This remarkable man whose spirit leads his people to-day as he in the flesh led them in the days of their great travail—is this man to be cheated of his birthright? Is this man's life story to be abridged, to be edited and revised—by whom? And are we thus to be denied his full heritage? Who is there so bold as to undertake so nefarious a task? America, the world, young and old, want all he said, all he did, and all that was said of him; and then let posterity judge, let the historians of the future synchronize these innumerable facts and draw the lasting conclusions and lessons and render the final verdict, based upon all the facts.

Senators and Congressmen of this day—and there are quite a number—students of Lincoln, have both spoken eloquently of Lincoln. Why should not they inaugurate such a movement by legislative appropriation at the next session of Congress, an appropriation which should have for its purpose the collecting of all that remains unpublished of the life and works of Abraham Lincoln, in conjunction with what has been collected? Why could not Congress inaugurate its deliberations every two years by a modest appropriation for continuing the gathering and publishing of all available material wherewith to prepare a complete edition of Lincoln's life and works? It has been done for others—Van Buren, Calhoun, Chase, and others.

Such a work for the man of the ages would immortalize the movers of such a resolution and would, in part at least, atone for the prolonged and disgracefully long drawn out discussion and unfair and unreasonable delay in the same forum when the granting of the small pension to the wife of the Emancipator came up for action, after being repeatedly shelved and pigeonholed.

In that Capitol—which stood an unfinished structure so ominous in its portents of dissolution of the embattled Union when Lincoln first appeared upon the scene, and which but for his life's work would never have been completed as the final home of the government of a reunited people—in that Capitol should that work of rehabilitation of the Lincoln who lived and loved, who suffered and succeeded, who guided and guarded, who planned and plodded and pleaded—who inspired the embattled warriors of the Union—begin. The Government which looks after the seacoast, the forests, the rivers, the mines, the fisheries, the bridges, the monuments, the oil preserves, the game laws should look after its own soul. Too long, alas, has this work waited and languished and been taken up by all except by those whose duty it is to do it.

Every man who came into Lincoln's life, every case he tried, should be followed up and recorded before it is too late. Every letter he wrote, every speech he delivered and which found its way into the press of the day should give up its Lincoln treasure. Every family of Cabinet officer, war governor, justice of the Supreme Court, Senator, or Congressman, or contemporary or foreign visitor who came in contact with Lincoln, should contribute a share in furnishing the letters he wrote to their sires. The Congressional Globe is ready, the newspaper files accessible—they have not yet entirely fallen apart—the records, such as have not been stolen, or lost, or mislaid, or borrowed in perpetuity, or locked up, are here—and now the board of editors and writers and compilers should be chosen so as to do the thorough, the complete, the definitive work. So much was done for Jefferson Davis by Dr. Dunbar Rowland. If more can not be done, less must not be done.

Who will lead? Who will avail himself of this privilege of opening the undiscovered world of Lincoln lore, Lincoln letters, Lincoln papers, Lincoln recollections, Lincoln anecdotes, Lincoln's pardons, Lincoln's commissions, Lincoln's surveys, Lincoln's written cards, Lincoln's passes, Lincoln's indorsements, Lincoln's photographs, Lincoln's legal papers, Lincoln's opinions, Lincoln's briefs, Lincoln's receipts, Lincoln's pleadings, and Lincoln's records—when all these shall have been gathered and made available—in addition to Lincoln's portraits and Lincoln's photographs which have been collected and are available; then will the real, humane, noble American be given to this and to succeeding generations, in all its almost superhuman manifestations, and that gentle spirit will then be at rest, for he will be seen and understood from every angle; his every act explained and understood, his words appreciated, and the many perplexing questions with which we are now confronted will be answered fully, completely, and comprehensive. And an entire world will come to know the real Lincoln as he lived, as he battled for the right, and as he fell when he had won the battle for the right, and as he will appear to us in that rarefied atmosphere where neither cant nor hypocrisy nor slander can reach or influence our judgment of him, for when that work is done Abraham Lincoln will stand revealed in all his great simplicities, even as Abraham and Moses stand revealed against a horizon of 30 centuries, even as Socrates stands revealed over a vista of over 20 centuries, even as Savonarola stands revealed rising from the ashes of his funeral pyre on the Plaza Veccio in Florence, even as Luther stands revealed, and we can almost hear the sounds of his hammer blows nailing his theses upon the church door of his native city; so will our own Abraham Lincoln take his place as the last of those lantern bearers of humanity, the greatest of these ambassadors of God. There he stood, adamant and unchangeable, like Luther he could not do otherwise and receive the approval of all succeeding generations for having breathed the breath of life into a meaningless, and until then a lifeless Declaration of Independence, which up to that day had been in existence, but into which Abraham Lincoln for the first time breathed the breath of life and illuminated the very words in the great declaration, which he made the living, virile, vibrating God-given charter of human liberties which it now is and which it will remain for all succeeding ages.

PENSIONS

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 16500, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title to the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title to the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this being District of Columbia day, I call up the bill S. 4441, relating to the collection and assessment of taxes in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the remedies provided in the act of July 1, 1902, for the collection of taxes on tangible personal property, shall be available also for the collection of taxes on intangible property.

In addition to the statutory remedies, all common-law and all equitable remedies shall also be available, either separately or concurrently with statutory remedies, as may be deemed advisable, for the collection of all taxes and special assessments of any kind whatsoever.

SEC. 2. Where real estate is levied upon for the nonpayment of personal taxes of any kind, and the best price offered at an auction sale is not sufficient to pay taxes, interest, and penalties, said real estate may be sold under decree of the equity court as provided by law.

SEC. 3. From and after the close of the current calendar year, motor vehicles taxable by the District of Columbia shall be assessed at their value as of January 1, each year, by the board of personal tax appraisers, subject to revision on appeal by the board of personal tax appeals, at the rate fixed for the taxation of other tangible personal property for the fiscal year ending the following June 30. The first assessment made under this section shall be at one-half such rate, to cover only the period from the following July 1 to December 31. The tax so assessed shall constitute the personal-property tax on such vehicles for the ensuing calendar year, and no motor-vehicle registration tag for any tax year shall be issued for motor vehicles subject to taxation on January 1 each year by the District of Columbia until the amount of such tax has been paid in full: Provided, That this section shall not apply to motor vehicles constituting the stock in trade of dealers, which shall be taxed as now provided by law. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or desirable to enforce the provisions of this section.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the act of Congress of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any person maintaining a place of abode in the District of Columbia on the 1st day of July of a taxable year, and for the three months prior thereto, shall be considered as a resident for the purpose of assessment on intangible property wherever located, unless evidence shall be submitted to the assessor of the District of Columbia, satisfactory to him, that such intangible personal property or the income thereof is taxed to said person in some other jurisdiction, or that the assets of a corporation or association represented by shares or certificates constituting such intangible personal property are taxed by the State in which such corporation or association is chartered or organized and in which such person has a legal residence, in lieu of a tax upon such shares or certificates: Provided, That Cabinet officers and persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office shall not be considered as residents of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this section."

SEC. 5. Section 5 of the said act of 1926 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Real-estate taxes and personal taxes of all kinds, excepting the tax on motor vehicles as herein provided, shall hereafter be payable semiannually in equal installments in the months of September and March. If either of said installments on real or personal property shall not be paid within the months when the same is due, said installments shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent, and there shall be added and collected with said tax a penalty of 1 per cent per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and such installment or installments, with the penalties thereon, shall constitute a delinquent tax to be collected in the manner now provided by law.

"If any person neglects or refuses to file a return of personal property as required by law, and the assessor certifies to the Board of Commissioners that, in his opinion, the best information obtainable does not afford a satisfactory basis for assessment, the Board of Commissioners may, by petition to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for mandamus against such person, compel the filing of a sworn return, and in such case the court shall require the person at fault to pay all expenses of the proceeding."

SEC. 6. Section 6 of the said act of 1926 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That returns of all property other than automobiles shall be made in the month of July in the fiscal year in which the assessment is levied and the value of such property shall be made as of the first day of that month except that merchants shall continue to return their average stock in trade as provided in said act of 1902: Provided, That this section shall be effective on July 1, 1929."

SEC. 7. Section 7 of the said act of 1902 is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the Board of Personal Tax Appeals shall meet on the first Monday of September of each year and continue in session until the first Monday in March of the following year, or until such time as their work shall have been completed."

SEC. 8. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, section 6, line 3, after the word "that," insert the words "beginning July 1, 1930."

Page 5, section 6, line 3, after the word "all," insert the word "property."

Page 5, section 6, line 9, strike out the words "on July 1" and insert the words "during March" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. This being a bill merely to give the District of Columbia better machinery for the collection of the taxes, something that every State has or should have, it has the unanimous support of the committee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It has. If no one desires to speak, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL METHOD OF COLLECTING TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3178) providing for an additional method for collecting taxes in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any real estate in the District of Columbia has been or shall hereafter be sold for nonpayment of taxes or assessments of any kind whatsoever and shall have been bought in by the District of Columbia, and more than two years shall have elapsed since such bidding in, and the same has not been redeemed in the manner and on the terms provided by law, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, in the name of and on behalf of the District of Columbia, apply to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting in equity, for the purpose of enforcing such tax lien by the said District of Columbia on the aforesaid property; and up to the time of the sale hereinafter provided for, such property may be redeemed by the owner thereof by the payment of the taxes and all legal penalties and costs thereon and such other costs as the court may deem proper.

Upon the proof in such suit of the failure of the owner or owners of the property to redeem it as provided by law, the court shall, without unreasonable delay, decree the sale of said property to satisfy the taxes, assessments, penalties, costs, and interest due the District of Columbia and the costs of the suit, and said sale shall be by the collector of taxes or his deputy, at public auction in front of said premises after advertisement of said sale for 10 consecutive days in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia: Provided, That if it shall appear that there were substantial defects in any tax sale, no part of the penalties and charges incidental to such sales shall be collectible. All persons interested in the property or entitled to redeem from such tax sale, shall be made parties thereto, and the proceeds from such judicial sale shall be applicable to the payment of the aggregate taxes, penalties, costs, including costs of such public advertising and sale, and interest due to the District of Columbia and the payment of costs of such suit. In no such case shall there be any allowance by the court for attorney's fees or trustees' commission.

No sale shall be made, unless by express order of the court, for an amount less than such aggregate taxes, interest, and costs of suit, including advertising and sale. Any surplus received from such sale over said amounts shall be paid by the collector of taxes into court to abide its further order for payment to the person or persons in equity entitled to receive it, if they shall be known. On confirmation of the sale by the court the court shall cause to be issued to the purchaser when he shall have paid the purchase money and complied with the terms of sale a deed to be executed by the clerk of the court which shall have the effect to convey to the purchaser all the right, title, and estate of all parties defendant, whether proceeded against as known or unknown.

Publication may be substituted for personal service upon any defendants not personally served by the marshall, whether known or unknown, by advertisement in some daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia at least once a week for three successive weeks, the first of such advertisements to appear at least three weeks before any petition shall be filed, and such costs of publication shall be lawful charges and be included in the costs of suit.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is legislation proposed and reported as a result of the suggestions on the part of members of the Committee on Appropriations of the two Houses. The bill has been drafted after a study of the situation by the District assessor and the District auditor and the corporation counsel. I think the report fully explains the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; and I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MUNICIPAL CENTER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16274) to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman go into the committee and take up all of these other measures?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Let us get through with this first.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe there is no objection to it, although I think we can save time by going into the committee now. There is an understanding that we will take this up first in the committee. We can approve it in the committee and lay it aside and go ahead if there is no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, we can pass the bill while we are arguing about it here.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the committee going to call up Senate bill 3936, which will practically legalize the practice of many incompetent chiropractors, osteopaths, and others who are now practicing in the District?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. We have a number of matters affecting the District about which there is no controversy. As chairman of the committee I am trying to get those out of the way first.

Mr. TILSON. I think we better get rid of the bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until I find out how far down on the gentleman's calendar this medical bill is?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is very near to the bottom.

Mr. SCHAFER. And it will not be taken up——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Not until late this afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there is a program as long as the gentleman's arm.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all of squares numbered 490 and 533, in the District of Columbia, including buildings and other structures thereon, as a site for a municipal center, and to construct thereon necessary buildings to house municipal activities: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to close and vacate such portions of streets and alleys as lie between or within such squares, as in the judgment of said commissioners may be necessary, and the portions of such streets and alleys so closed and vacated shall thereupon become parts of such site: Provided further, That if this property or any part thereof shall be condemned, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to enter immediately into the possession of any such property for which an award shall have been made by paying the amount of such award into the registry of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including not to exceed $10,000 for the employment, by contract or otherwise, of architectural and other professional services, as approved by the commissioners and without reference to the classification act of 1923, as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "490 and 533" and insert in lieu thereof "490, 491, 533, and reservation 10."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The bill as originally drawn provided for the purchase of squares 490 and 533. The amendment will add square 491 and reservation 10. May I inquire if the Commissioners of the District favor the purchase of all of these four squares?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall defer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], who has been very much interested in this legislation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the commissioners asked for the two squares in the first place, with the idea in mind that they would do for their present needs. The situation is this: The two squares which they propose to take are back of Pennsylvania Avenue, beyond the north side of the Avenue, and that leaves two squares on the Avenue itself right between this municipal development and the Federal development on the south side of the Avenue. Those two squares in four or five years would cost more than the total purchase price of the four squares to-day because of this development, and the natural increase in the valuation of the land. When the amendment was offered in the House the commissioners took the stand that although they would not oppose it they still would not advocate it. As a matter of good business policy on the part of Congress, the committee thought it would be advisable to take the whole four at the present time and at the present price, rather than to pay in four or five years from now twice as much as the whole four squares would cost to-day.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As I understand the location of this property, it would include the very commodious building that is owned by the Ford Motor Co.?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; it would.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It would; but the committee had in mind that this valuable property could be leased to private individuals or corporations until such time as there would be need for it for municipal development. It would be short-sighted policy to purchase the two squares back on John Marshall Place and Judiciary Square and allow these two squares to remain between the Government's holdings on the south side of the Avenue and Judiciary Square on the north. It is better that the District Commissioners secure title to this property now, and lease it until such time as there is need for it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This will involve a rather large expenditure of money, and it occurred to me that the District Commissioners, as representatives of the District, should be consulted about a matter of this kind.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The District Commissioners originally prepared plans for these four squares. The National Capital Park and Planning Commission added one square additional to the west; but the committee, in considering the matter, having the commissioners before them and the municipal architect, with the original plans, felt it would be a short-sighted policy not to purchase the entire four squares at this time.

The District Commissioners felt that they were more or less bound by the recommendation of the Budget, which only recommended two squares, but I am informed the gentleman from Nebraska, chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, has had a talk with some official of the Budget and the President, and there is no real opposition to the acquisition of the four squares with the idea of leasing such property as not now needed until it is needed by the municipal center.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Another inquiry I would like to propound. As I understand the cost of these four squares is $4,000,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; it is more than that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The estimated cost of the two squares was $2,600,000, and the other squares on Pennsylvania Avenue, the estimated cost is about $6,000,000, or perhaps a little rising of that. Ten years' interest at 4 per cent on the amount that would be obliged to be expended, $1,800,000, the annual increase in the valuation of those two squares——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I would ask for five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is estimated by everybody that such increase would bring it close to about $12,000,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman says the total estimate of cost is about $12,000,000. May I inquire the total assessed valuation——

Mr. SIMMONS. Six million dollars.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say what it is——

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I would like to know how much it is.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will give the information. The assessment of this property is approximately $4,000,000. The estimate by purchase under condemnation is based upon 150 per cent of the assessed value, and would be $6,400,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That was the information I wanted. It is my view that the committee bringing in legislation of that kind ought to fix a maximum of one and one-half of the assessed valuation, and that would give ample opportunity to exceed the assessor's figures where it has to be done.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I might say that the Appropriations Committee in making appropriations available for various playgrounds, recreational centers, school sites have almost uniformly fixed it at 125 per cent.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This fixes none at all. I am convinced that certain property situated in the so-called triangle south of Pennsylvania Avenue is being sold to the Government at an excessive price.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is only an authorization.

Mr. SIMMONS. They have been paying excessive values, without doubt, but I do not think we can apply a limitation here successfully.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHILDREN'S TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 13752, Union Calendar No. 733, providing authorization for a children's tuberculosis sanatorium, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the bill H. R. 13752, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13752) to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to cause to be constructed thereon, in accordance with plans and specifications approved by such commissioners, suitable buildings and structures for use as a children's tuberculosis sanatorium, including necessary approaches and roadways, heating and ventilating apparatus, furniture, equipment, and accessories.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

With a Senate amendment as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "act," insert the words "to be appropriated in like manner as other appropriations for the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF DISTRICT BUSINESS

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate on these bills be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the other half by myself.

Mr. HOLADAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does that apply to all bills

Mr. ZIHLMAN. All bills on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the time for general debate shall be limited to three hours for all of these bills.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the bills are not controversial, and there will be no debate on them at all in all probability.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, suppose that a bill on which the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Texas are agreed is taken up: Are you going to have all of the time controlled by those who favor the bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that personally I shall be very glad to yield to him such time as he may desire on any of these bills.

Mr. SCHAFER. I may desire to have some time on the medical bill.

Mr. HOLADAY. Reserving further the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is possible we may find ourselves in a position where most of the three hours shall be consumed on one or two bills, and no time left for the others.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I think it is possible.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

Mr. BLANTON. We can handle the bills more expeditiously this way than in any other way.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think I shall have to object, because if we are going to allow only three hours for all the bills we may not have any time to discuss the medical bill.

BATHING POOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 5758; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and one-half by myself.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless you can have a general agreement on all of them, let us go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the debate is unlimited, the entire day can be taken up in the discussion of the Burlingame case, for example.

Mr. HOLADAY. I am not greatly interested in this particular bill.

Mr. BLANTON. How much time would the gentleman want?

Mr. HOLADAY. That depends upon developments.

Mr. SCHAFER. May I ask if the gentleman has a bill on the calendar relating to Captain Burlingame?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I understand he has asked that he be suspended and that the commissioners have suspended him pending a hearing. I am trying to avoid taking up that case by endeavoring to reach a general agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5758; and pending that, he asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is an agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5758, with Mr. SCHAFER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5758, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the establishment of artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia," approved May 4, 1926 (44 Stat. 394), is hereby amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

SECTION 1. That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to locate and construct in the District of Columbia, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and after consultation with the Commission of Fine Arts, as appropriations shall be provided therefor, artificial bathing pools or beaches, not exceeding 12 in number, with suitable buildings, shower baths, lockers, provisions for the use of filtered water, purification of the water, and all things necessary for the proper conduct of such pools or beaches, and to conduct and maintain the same. The cost of construction of any of these pools or beaches, with buildings and equipment, shall not exceed $200,000 each, and the appropriation of the sums necessary for the purposes named is hereby authorized.

SEC. 2. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital may, in the interest of economy and good administration, with the consent of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transfer, for such period as he shall determine, to said commissioners the possession, control, and maintenance of any of said bathing pools or beaches. Otherwise they shall be operated and maintained by the said Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks, and in either case the official conducting any bathing pool or beach is hereby authorized to charge and collect a reasonable fee for the use and enjoyment of such pool or beach, and to use the fund arising therefrom to cover the expense of operation thereof, and such minor repairs as are incident thereto. An accurate account of such receipts and expenditures shall be made of record, and receipts in excess of expenditures may be expended upon improvement of the property or facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for one hour.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an authorization for the construction of bathing pools in connection with the playgrounds and recreational centers of the District of Columbia. In 1926 the House passed a bill, which became a law, authorizing the construction of two large bathing pools, one for white and one for colored, and authorized the appropriation of $345,000 for the construction of these two pools. The bill provided that the pools should be built on land owned by the Federal Government and that the sites of the pools should be approved by the Fine Arts Commission and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. After consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the late distinguished chairman, Mr. Madden, the Park and Planning Commission recommended that instead of building two large pools, which would result in the congestion of traffic and other difficulties, that a number of smaller pools be constructed at various playgrounds and recreational centers. In accordance with that policy two pools were constructed at a cost of approximately $75,000 each, or a total of $150,000. The purpose of this bill is to authorize from time to time the construction of additional bathing facilities in connection with the playgrounds and recreational centers.

When this bill was before the House on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, some objection was made to it on the ground that there was too large a number authorized. I said at that time I was perfectly willing to modify the bill and authorize a lesser number, and then some objection was made to the cost of the pools. I will state now that when we reach that section of the bill I will offer an amendment authorizing six instead of twelve and limiting the cost to $150,000 instead of $200,000 per pool.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows the local opposition to this bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman state that the proposed locations of these two pools are satisfactory to all the citizens of Washington?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The pools are not located.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman has an idea where they are going to be located?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; I do not have any idea. The pools will be built at various times on the recommendation of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and with, of course, the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations, which makes the money available. I have not any idea about their location.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows about the happenings concerning bathing pools in the District of Columbia within the last six years and the animosity it created among certain citizens?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state to the gentleman that there has been opposition to the construction of the two bathing pools authorized, in various parts of the city, but to my mind that opposition is not well founded, and the people are entitled to this recreation and these facilities, which are given to people in every other large city of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. If we were to put one of these pools out here in Maryland——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The Marylanders would be just like the Virginians; they would be objecting, would they not?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I did not know there had been any objection from Virginia, but I will state that we would welcome this expenditure out in Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to use this opportunity to discuss a question that should interest every citizen of the District who believes in law and order, and likewise every such person in the United States. Washington is the Nation's Capital. It belongs to the people of the United States. They come here from every State all through the year to see their Capital. When they come here they place their lives and such personal property as they bring with them in the hands of the law-enforcing officers of the city while they are in Washington. It is highly necessary that in the Nation's Capital there should be law enforcement. There should be law-enforcing officers who believe in the law, who obey the law, and who are not afraid to enforce it. There is no enforcement of law in Washington that can be depended upon and there has not been for several years.

I want to give you just a little chronological history on the subject. You will remember that when the District Committee, through certain of its members, was trying to clean up the park police force here all sorts of scandals developed. At that time I thought the park police force ought to be abolished, but I have come to the conclusion that I was wrong; that the park police force, now cleaned up, and controlled by this Government through our officers in the Army, is the only real safeguard this Government has for its property and for the life and welfare of the employees who work in the Federal Government. In cleaning up that park police force there was a splendid young officer, who was an ex-service man and who did his bit during the World War, that helped us. He rendered valuable and material aid to us, and our committee was instrumental in cleaning up that park police force at that time. But there were retaliations and recriminations against this young officer because they found out he had assisted the committee. They made life so miserable for him in the park police force that he was about to quit, and I got the Civil Service Commission to order his transfer to the Metropolitan force and got the commissioners to approve it. He was made an officer in the Metropolitan police force, but the resentment followed him there. They tried to put him down at the bottom instead of giving him his prestige and standing in the force.

I had to appeal his case to the Hon. J. R. McCarl, the Comptroller General of the United States, in order to get his rights, and General McCarl ordered the commissioners to restore this young officer to his proper rank and his proper salary, and they were compelled to do it.

Then the question came up about doing some cleaning up in the Metropolitan police force, and the Gibson committee was duly organized to do this work. It is mean work, it is unpleasant work, but I want to say to my friend from Vermont, Colonel GIBSON, that the people of this Nation owe him a debt of gratitude for the hard work he has done. [Applause.]

Oh, an effort has been made to intimidate him. His life has been threatened. He has been threatened with being framed this way and that way; threatened that they might frame him with some woman, but they could not carry that idea out, because in such respect he is above suspicion. Then they threatened to put a case of liquor in his car some time and have him caught with it; but he was unafraid and they could not stop him with that. Then they threatened to run him down with an automobile, and they could not intimidate the Colonel with that; and I take my hat off to him. He has done splendid, noble work for this District. [Applause.]

But we were cleaning up the Metropolitan police force. We had found a man here who came before our committee and told us without any hesitation that he had had a truck built in Philadelphia with a special secret compartment in it that carried 150 gallons of whisky that you could not find unless you knew the secret springs that opened the compartment, and he said:

> I had that truck built to bring liquor into the city of Washington. It is my truck, and these two men I have had here have brought load after load, under police protection, from the city of Philadelphia, the city of Cumberland, the city of Baltimore, and various other cities, to Washington; and they have had police protection for months in all of these cities and in Washington.
> They have never been molested—

He said—

> until the other morning when they were coming in here on a certain street, as is always done, at 5 o'clock in the morning, when a policeman in uniform hijacked them and took their whisky and their truck away from them.

And after stealing their liquor, he returned their truck.

We brought this truck up to the House Office Building and we sent for the commissioners. We had the commissioners and their Superintendent of Police Hesse present to inspect this truck and to hear these three men testify under oath that they had brought this stuff in here time and time again and that this policeman, Taylor, had hijacked them and had taken their whisky away; and to our great surprise, neither the superintendent of police nor the commissioners did one single thing about that case. We said, "Messrs. Commissioners, here is this truck. Under the law it should be confiscated to the Government. Here it is, we turn it over to you." In less than 24 hours they had turned that truck back to this bootlegger that had had it built in order to violate the law.

Then what happened? They suspected that this young officer had been giving us information; the same young man who had helped us to clean up the park force. I heard immediately that there were two officers here, who had been reported to us as running speak-easies across the street from one of the police stations, who were preparing to frame this young officer because they thought he had given them away.

I went down to that police precinct and told the captain and all the men assembled just what I had heard and called the names of these two officers, Schenk and Hunt, and I said, "You shall not frame him under any such circumstances if I can help it"; but in less than five days they had 12 charges lodged against this young officer.

You will remember you thought I was dabbling with mighty little business when I went down to see that this young officer had a square deal. Why, it was a question that involved the integrity of law enforcement in the Nation's Capital that was actuating me, and wholly without remuneration I went down there and defended him, and upon those 12 charges, on framed-up testimony, he was finally acquitted upon 10 of them, and convicted, finally, upon only 2.

But before he was tried I went to your three commissioners and I laid the cards on the table. I said, "Gentlemen, there is a move here in this District to frame an honest, fearless, young police officer who has helped the committee. I ask you to hear this case yourselves and decide the matter, which is your right under the regulations of this District."

They said that they would not do that, and, instead of letting him be tried by the regular board, they sent down there two special hand-picked captains to try him, men who were not members of the police trial board.

One of them was this officer we are now investigating, Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, and he was one of the men who sat on the board, and I want you to note the testimony, which I am going to show you in a few minutes, where he told a friend of his he had been ordered by the headquarters of the police to convict this young officer. And on 2 of the 12 charges Staples was convicted—the most ridiculous charges you ever heard of. One was that nearly a year before, he had attacked a young girl named Virginia Everhart.

This young girl came before this trial board and said:

> I never knew this man until this case came up; I never saw the man; but this policeman, Hunt, came to me and tried to get me to swear out an affidavit against him, and I would not do it.

She showed absolutely that it was a frame up, and yet the commissioners convicted him in sustaining the verdict.

The other charge was about two weeks before, that he had made an attack on another party, with underworld witnesses testifying against him. We showed that on that very day the attack was alleged to have taken place this young officer Staples went under the knife on an operating table in the Naval Hospital. The doctors testified that he was there a week on his back, unable to move. And yet, in spite of all that, Burlingame and the commissioners convicted him and got him off the force.

As Burlingame stated to a friend, they would teach policemen that they could not report matters to Congressmen or Senators. They got rid of him. If he goes to the devil, it would not surprise me at all; because when you let an officer who is trying to do right, and has a wife and three children and has been a service man, fighting for his country, and then let the law go against him, turn him down in disgrace, and an entire police force try to ruin him, God knows what will become of him. Usually he will go to the dogs.

I believe he was honest and honorable and rendered splendid service to Washington and the committee until the commissioners kicked him off the force.

Now, what has happened to Taylor, the one who hijacked the truck? He has been convicted, and it took a special guard to protect the district attorney who prosecuted him. What became of Schenk, the man who was the framer of this good officer? He is now a fugitive from justice. You saw where he shot a man up in New Jersey, and every policeman in Washington is now hunting for him. He had to be kicked off the force; that is what happened to him.

What about Burlingame? I want to show you what the Gibson committee says about him. The Gibson committee, by unanimous consent, voted—every member of the committee present and voting for this report—listen to what the Gibson committee says. This is the committee report Chairman GIBSON wrote the commissioners:

FEBRUARY 7, 1929.

The Hon. PROCTOR L. DOUGHERTY,
President Board of Commissioners, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHERTY: This will acknowledge your letter of the 6th instant inclosing a copy of the report with recommendations made to the commissioners by the major and superintendent of police under date of February 5, 1929, regarding Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, of the Metropolitan police force.

You state no further action could be taken until Mrs. Blalock appears before the proper authorities as a complaining witness.

I am directed by the unanimous vote of the subcommittee to reply thereto as follows:

The purpose of the subcommittee is to be helpful to the regularly constituted authorities of the District, and all of our inquiries have been undertaken solely in that spirit. We can not, however, refrain from making suggestions and calling attention to the situation in respect to the case of Captain Burlingame.

The chairman has no knowledge whatsoever as to the whereabouts of the complainant. I have to-day made inquiry of each member of the subcommittee who could possibly know where she is, and each have stated that they have no knowledge; so, in respect to her appearance, we are confronted with a situation over which we have no control.

We respectfully call your attention to the fact that on January 30 we furnished you with authentic photostats of the following documents:

1. Check for $2,500 drawn on her account in the National Bank of Washington, signed by Helen F. Blalock, payable to the order of Guy E. Burlingame, purporting to be indorsed on the back by Guy E. Burlingame, a captain in your Metropolitan police force, and showing he had this money paid to him January 28, 1928, through the Riggs National Bank.

2. Receipt purporting to be signed by said Guy E. Burlingame acknowledging the payment to him of $700 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock, reciting that the money was withdrawn from her account in the Perpetual Building Association.

3. Receipt purporting to be signed by said Guy E. Burlingame, dated June 14, 1928, acknowledging the payment to him of $8,700 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock, reciting that this money was withdrawn from her account in the Perpetual Building Association.

4. Said withdrawal receipt, furnished us by said bank, same being one of its regular blanks, signed by said Helen F. Blalock, with notation thereon that check for the $8,700 be made to Guy E. Burlingame, and same purporting to be indorsed on the back by said Guy E. Burlingame.

5. The check of said association, furnished to us by said bank, making said $8,700 payable to the order of said Guy E. Burlingame, and same purporting to be indorsed on its back by Guy E. Burlingame, and also on its back showing certification by the Riggs National Bank as to the genuineness of his signature, and showing also that the bank when paying it required said Burlingame to again indorse his signature under said certificate of the Riggs National Bank.

6. Receipt purporting to be signed by said Guy E. Burlingame acknowledging the payment to him of $135 by said Mrs. Helen F. Blalock on June 14, 1928.

7. Receipt signed with pen, purporting to be in the handwriting of said Guy E. Burlingame, signed "G. E. Burlingame," acknowledging the payment to him of $500 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

8. Typewritten receipt signed with pen, purporting to be the signature of said Guy E. Burlingame, acknowledging payment to him of $500 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

9. Receipt signed with pen, purporting to be in the handwriting of Guy E. Burlingame, signed "G. E. Burlingame," acknowledging the payment to him of $245.14 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

10. Typewritten receipt, signed with pen, purporting to be the signature of said Guy E. Burlingame, acknowledging the payment to him of $245.14 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

11. Certification signed with pen, purporting to be the signature of said Guy E. Burlingame, on December 19, 1927, acknowledging that he had no claims whatever against Mrs. Helen F. Blalock or her property; with receipt attached written with pen, purporting to be in the handwriting of said Guy E. Burlingame, acknowledging the payment to him of $500.40 by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

12. Another receipt dated October 26, 1927, purporting to be signed by said Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, acknowledging payment by Mrs. Helen F. Blalock.

13. Check for $500.40 signed by Helen F. Blalock, drawn on her account in the National Bank of Washington, payable to the order of said Guy E. Burlingame, and indorsed on back by said Guy E. Burlingame, and showing payment to him by said bank.

14. Large envelope, identical with those officially used by captains in police precincts, upon which is written:

"Private papers, property of Mrs. Helen F. Blalock, No. 1504 Seventh Street NW. (second floor).

"Put in safe at No. 2 police station for protection against fire, etc.

"Will be called for by Mrs. Blalock, who has a card signed by myself.

"GUY E. BURLINGAME,
"Captain Second Precinct."

The above signature written with a pen by said Guy E. Burlingame.

15. The said card, authorizing the delivery of the above package to Mrs. Helen F. Blalock, signed with pen, purporting to be in the handwriting of said Guy E. Burlingame, and stating that the key to his safe would be found "upon my key ring, next to the patrol-box key," with "Captain No. 2" under his signature.

16. Waiver and release purporting to be signed by said Guy E. Burlingame, dated December 4, 1928, acknowledging that he had no claims against the fixtures in Mrs. Blalock's store building at 613 H Street NE., which her delinquent tenant had turned over to her for $500 unpaid back rent.

17. Two-page typewritten letter, dated September 26, 1927, beginning "My dear Helen" and signed "Daddy," under which is the signature with a pen, signed by said Guy E. Burlingame, which letter alone unexplained should cause his suspension from the force.

All 17 of the foregoing purport to be signed by Guy E. Burlingame, and we are convinced that handwriting experts would tell you they were signed by Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, and that all of the typewritten documents were written on the same typewriter. Citizens in the District certainly will agree that no policeman, whether private or high official, who would write the letter last mentioned in (17) should continue on the Metropolitan police force pending investigation.

The foregoing were introduced before our committee in the presence of said Guy E. Burlingame, Major Hesse, and his assistant, Superintendent Pratt. Captain Burlingame was then advised that if he denied signing any of the above they would be withdrawn immediately. He made no denial whatever. He refused to answer any questions from a member of the committee. Realizing that he could thus claim immunity, the committee did not try to compel him to answer when such answers might incriminate him. He was, however, offered an opportunity to make a statement, yet he did not deny signing any of said documents.

We can not come to any other conclusion than that the last-mentioned letter alone, proven to be signed by Captain Burlingame and unexplained as it is, would justify you in taking immediate action on the matter of conduct unbecoming a member of the Metropolitan police force. Your action is in no way dependent upon criminal investigation that may be made by the district attorney and the court. The letter is sufficient to entitle you to an explanation as a condition precedent to the active continuance of Captain Burlingame over a precinct.

In addition to the foregoing, we furnished you also with an authentic copy of the affidavit of Mrs. Helen F. Blalock, who under oath stated that Capt. Guy E. Burlingame had signed and written the above; that he had ruined her life; that he was seeking to get her jewelry and property; that he had threatened her with death, and had also threatened the life of a Congressman; that through fear of him she was compelled to leave her home in Washington, where she was born; and that she believed he would do her harm if she came back. This affidavit belongs to the files of this committee. Any of you may inspect it. Your corporation counsel, Judge W. W. Bride, carefully compared your copy with the original, and he knows your copy is correct.

We also furnished you with authentic photostats of numerous other letters, cards, slips, and envelopes, all of which we believe experts could convince you were written by Capt. Guy E. Burlingame.

Your superintendent of police accepted this situation as one of the commonplace routine events. As to whether Captain Burlingame has been called upon to make explanation of the checks, receipts of large sums of money, and business transactions with the complainant and which constitute one of the chief claims, the record will disclose. But we believe we are safe in saying that no such demand has been made by the major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police. That portion of her complaint remains without action.

We are now furnishing you with the following authentic photostats of additional evidence, to wit:

1. Letter dated September 8, 1927, signed by Guy E. Burlingame, written to Mrs. Blalock, with exhibit attached.

2. Letter addressed "Helen" and signed "Heartsore," with attached envelope, which envelope now sent is the one in which this letter was placed in the box of Mrs. Blalock, same being addressed to Mrs. Helen F. Blalock with a pen, purported to be in the handwriting of Capt. Guy E. Burlingame. In photostating this letter the operator by mistake attached the wrong envelope to it when it was sent to you before, and its correct envelope is now sent you. Attached to this letter is a photostat of a post office registry card, showing that Capt. Guy E. Burlingame received the parcel-post package containing his clothes, which, in his above letter, he mentioned had been sent back to him by Mrs. Blalock.

3. Letter dated March 1, 1927, addressed "My Wonderful Baby Girl" and signed "Your Loving Daddy," with attached envelope postmarked same date, March 1, 1927, which envelope is addressed in what purports to be the handwriting of said Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, with pen and ink, and addressed to Mrs. Helen F. Blalock at her address.

We are also inclosing you authentic photostats of a document signed by W. K. Reeve, a reputable builder here, witnessed by Burlingame, who signs this one "G. E. Burlingame," which corroborates Mrs. Blalock. You will remember that on the receipts where Burlingame merely signed his name "G. E. Burlingame" she claims she made him also sign "Guy E. Burlingame" right underneath before she paid him the money he wanted; also an agreement between Mrs. Blalock and the Chemical Paper Co., witnessed by Burlingame, who signed his name "Guy E. Burlingame"; also various envelopes, some purporting to be in the handwriting of Guy E. Burlingame.

All of these documents, corroborated by the records of the aforementioned banks and business concerns, the typewriter style of cards, envelopes, and stationery such as used at precinct No. 2, all indicate that Burlingame wrote the letters sent you addressed to Mrs. Blalock, and that such action unexplained constitutes "conduct unbecoming an officer."

Our desire in this matter is to see that the rights of the people of the District are safeguarded; that they have the protection of the best police force in the world; that law and order be maintained here on a plane higher than in any other municipality of the country so that it may become an example for all others. The rank and file of the force are honest and conscientious in the performance of their duties. When the utility of one of their superiors is impaired it is for the good of the whole force that such action be taken as will maintain the entire personnel upon a high efficiency basis.

We have no desire to advise any action that will fail of full justice to any accused. His constitutional rights will be protected. At the same time we ask that the rights of the people of the District be safeguarded.

The subcommittee must finish its work in a short time. We do not desire to leave the police situation in the air. To do so would be unfair to all concerned. We shall do our best to arrive at a solution and beg of you the hearty cooperation of the District government to that end.

We do not intend in this case that justice shall fail either to the people of the District or to the accused officer. Charges of the kind made should be speedily resolved either for or against the accused.

In our opinion Captain Burlingame should be suspended pending investigation. Suspension does not pass on his guilt.

With personal regards, I remain, sincerely yours,

E. W. GIBSON,

Chairman of the Subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives Making a Survey of the Government of the District.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is evident from the general facts stated regarding this case that the presence of Mrs. Blalock as a witness is important, if not necessary. As I understand the facts, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is the last man connected with this case who knew of her whereabouts. Would the gentleman mind telling the House if he has any information now as to where Mrs. Blalock is?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, at a time in Texas when I had two children sick with the flu in my home, and two more sick in a hospital off at school, and after I had just recently helped bury a near relative, there came to Abilene, where I live, this poor woman from Washington, insisting that I see her at once. At first I refused to do that. Before I left Washington she had tried to get me to see her here and I would not do it. I did not have the time. I had given enough of my time to District matters. She told me such a pitiful story in Abilene, Tex., that I wired to your chairman of the so-called Gibson committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and asked him if he knew of her story, as she said she had told it to him, and if he believed her. He wired me back that he did know of her story and did believe her and asked me to get a statement from her for use before the committee. I then heard her, and at the insistence of Colonel GIBSON in a second telegram I finally persuaded her to make an affidavit for the use of the committee, which she did. She then said that she did not know where she would go. She wanted to find out the district of some Congressman who was not afraid to protect a constituent's rights. She said, "I know that you are going out of Congress, and I want to go to the district of some man who is not afraid to protect me in my rights." I said, "I know of a man. You go to CLAUDE HUDSPETH's district in El Paso; he is not afraid of the devil." [Applause and laughter.] She said that she would go to El Paso.

Then I saw that I was getting my friend HUDSPETH into trouble, and I talked her out of it. I said, "Do not go there, because it is on the Mexican border, and an enemy of yours could get a Mexican peon thug to knock you in the head for $10, down there on the border." I talked her out of that. When she left Abilene she said, "I am going to locate somewhere; I do not know where yet, but I will let you know, because I want you to collect and send me my rent money; I am out of money now, and I will let you know." Since then I have gotten a very short communication from her, sent in such a way that it gives me no address whatever, and although I have tried to find her I have not been able to do so. She has been absolutely afraid of her life to such an extent that she will not even give me her address. Her tenant here has given me a check for her rent and I have had that since January 30, and I can not even send it to her. If I knew her address I would send it to her immediately, as I know she needs it. I do not know her address, and I have not seen her since she left Abilene, Tex.

Mr. SIMMONS. One further question. The gentleman then has no information that could be used by either the Department of Justice or the District officials in attempting to locate her?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Collins, assistant district attorney, and I are working shoulder to shoulder in the matter, and we are good friends. I have absolute confidence in him and I have confidence in Mr. Rover, with whom I have had conferences, and we are working along lines to the best interests of the people. I have no confidence in Hesse or his police department while controlled by him. He talks about furnishing protection to this woman—his police protection. That is the last thing on earth that she wants. What she wants is protection from his police, and not his protection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. And whenever I can get in communication with her I think I can assure the House that Mr. Collins and the Department of Justice will see to it that she gets protection. That is one reason I have taken the floor this afternoon, using the opportunity it gives me to have this RECORD go into the States, and I hope that it will be brought to the attention of this good woman, and that even though she can not get protection from Hesse and his bunch, she can from our Department of Justice and our Government, and that it will give her protection night and day if she will come back. I want to say that I urge her to come back and put herself in charge of the Department of Justice.

And now I must go on. I want you to see what this woman swears to, a woman who was raised in the city of Washington, who was born here, who is a citizen of the Government, but who is afraid to come to her home, afraid of one high police official, and the record shows that she has reason to be afraid.

Look here at what I called the commissioners' attention to when I submitted the brief in that young officer's case. This is a copy of the brief which I filed with them on April 20, 1928, nearly a year ago. Notice what I told them then about Captain Burlingame, whom they had sent down there as a hand-picked trial board to frame this young policeman. I said in that brief that "during the said trial it was reported to the appellant's counsel that the appellant had no chance of acquittal, as the chairman had said that he was a loyal friend of Fenning's, and he now had a chance to get even with the man who forced him out of office, and that Burlingame would never acquit Staples, because he was receiving weekly"—from whom? Did I give a lot of anonymous letters to them? No; I gave the names. I said "because Burlingame is receiving weekly from Sam Beard, Frank McCormack, Eddy Killeen, and Vic Syos"—oh, just ask Mr. GIBSON about these men and what he knows about their violating the law here under police protection, and he has learned it through his Gibson committee.

A MEMBER. Receiving what?

Mr. BLANTON. He was receiving weekly pay for protection, "one of whom was paying Burlingame $300 per month." That is the information I gave the commissioners nearly a year ago, and I asked the commissioners to reopen that case and try it de novo, which they had a right to do, and I assured them personally that I would bring evidence there that would satisfy them that this was the case, but they would not do it, and they kicked that poor policeman out on such framed-up, flimsy evidence that had been overturned by witness after witness in that trial.

And I showed by every big officer in that department that this young officer had the best of reputation, that he was fearless, honest, diligent, energetic, and had more arrests than any man on the force. They turned that down and kicked him out and kept Burlingame, and that without giving me an opportunity to press those facts before them.

A distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol knew what he was talking about when he said he did not have so much confidence in the commissioners. If I were the President of the United States, I would kick them out of office, lock, stock, and barrel. I would put in some men in their place who would enforce the law. I want to show what this poor woman swore to before the officer in Texas. Will the Clerk read her affidavit in my time?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read. There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF MRS. HELEN BLALOCK

The STATE OF TEXAS,

County of Taylor:

I, (Mrs.) Helen F. Blalock, of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, upon oath, state: At the insistence of Congressman ERNEST W. GIBSON and Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, chairman and ranking minority member, respectively, of the Gibson subcommittee, investigating affairs in the District of Columbia, that I relate the treatment accorded me by Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, of the Metropolitan police force, I have decided to tell said committee what I know, in order to obviate my being forced to return to Washington to appear personally before said committee, this statement to supplement that partial evidence I have already given before said committee.

I left Washington because I believed Captain Burlingame would take my life, and he would have caused me to lose all of my property there on January 15, 1929, if I hadn't succeeded in getting Congressman BLANTON to have extended for me loans of $7,000 and $210 accrued interest, and $1,045.66 that was due and payable on said January 15, 1929, same being first and second trusts against my property on H Street NE., and I also left there because life was simply unbearable with said Captain Burlingame continually annoying, harassing, browbeating, threatening, and dominating me and my property, which for two years he has been deliberately planning to take from me.

Said Capt. Guy Burlingame found out that I had some money and two pieces of valuable property in Washington, and that I was a licensed palmist, and he began to call on me in a social way, pretending to be desperately in love with me, and forcing his attentions upon me. I finally learned that he was a married man, and when I upbraided him about it, he said his wife was dying with cancer, and that I couldn't get along in Washington without his friendship and protection, as I couldn't get a license without his help, and that I would be constantly molested and put out of business without his help.

I simply loathed him, and I lived in constant dread and fear of him, and I did everything within my power to stop him from coming to see me. He forced me to give him a key to my apartments, and he would come there at any time of night or day that suited him, and through threats and intimidations harassed me until I was a nervous wreck.

I stopped him many times and demanded that he stay away, and he would write me ardent messages of love and affection. The letters, and slips, and cards, all written on his same typewriter, and some unsigned, and some signed "Heartsore," and some "Your broken-hearted Daddy," and some, "Your loving Daddy," and others in various ways, were all written by Capt. Guy E. Burlingame and sent to me urging me to let him come back. He rang me up so much on the telephone that I had to have it disconnected. He simply wrecked and ruined my life. When I intimated that I would go away from Washington where he couldn't bother me, he said he had means of finding me anywhere, and that through his police connections he would have me worried and molested anywhere I went so that I would have to come back to Washington, as I couldn't live anywhere else.

He insisted on buying things for me, and then he would take my money to pay for it. He would pay my taxes for me and then take my money to cover it. He would make the contracts for the repair of my buildings, and then I would give him the money to pay for it. He gave me a diamond ring. I didn't want it. I told him it would not fit. He took it off and had it made smaller, and he returned it in the box it was in when I turned it over to Congressman GIBSON, of Vermont, as I had heard rumors that one was taken in a raid. He cashed and kept the money on the check for $2,500 I gave him January 7, 1928, on the National Bank of Washington. He withdrew and kept the $8,700, which on June 16, 1928, he drew from my account, "Series No. 50 148," with the Perpetual Building Association at Eleventh and E Streets NW. He received and kept the $700 withdrawn on December 17, 1927, and the $699 withdrawn on December 19, 1927, from my account, Series No. 48 1364 in the said Perpetual Building Association. For months he has kept me from getting a tenant in my H Street property, thinking I would not be able to extend the loans against it on January 15, 1929, and he has suggested to me that I make a will in his favor, and several times he suggested that I commit suicide.

During the time he sat on the trial board in the Staples case, after each session, he would come to my apartments sometime during the night and tell me about it; during the first four days he said that even if the headquarters were demanding his conviction, he wasn't going to convict Staples on the ridiculous evidence of negro bootleggers and prostitutes, but toward the end of the trial he stated to me that he had decided to convict Staples, in order to stop policemen from reporting police matters to Congressmen. When I asked him if he wasn't ashamed to convict an innocent man he said that he was going to make Washington policemen afraid to tell anything to Congressmen and Senators, and his conviction had been demanded by headquarters. He said that BLANTON was continually dabbling in Washington affairs and ought to be killed.

When he kept bothering me and made my life miserable, I told him that if he didn't let me alone, and stay away from my apartment, I was going to let Congressman BLANTON and his committee know about how he had mistreated me. He said that if I ever made his affairs public "he and I would go to hell together," he intimating that he would shoot us both, and he said that "Congressman BLANTON would get his, if he didn't let Washington affairs alone." Several times he wanted me to promise him that I would marry him just as soon as his wife died, but I told him I wouldn't do it.

I know that Capt. Guy E. Burlingame will kill me if I live in Washington, and I can't return there, as his forced attentions upon me are simply unbearable. I have thus been forced to move away from my home city where I was born, in order to have any peace of mind, and to escape him. I am a widow with no one to protect me, and he has simply ruined my life for two years. I know how insincere and false his protestations of love for me were, and how unfaithful he was to his wife, and how he was prostituting his official power for his own selfish gain, and I couldn't stand for him to be around me.

I have considerable jewelry which was given to me by my husband during our married life, among which are two valuable diamond rings and a valuable diamond necklace with 11 diamonds in it. He wanted me to let him keep this jewelry and my other valuables in his safe at precinct No. 2, saying they would be safe from fire, but I wouldn't let him keep them. I knew that he was after my jewelry, for he had begged me to let him have my diamond necklace, but I wouldn't do it. He told me that he would keep my valuables for me in a sealed envelope marked as my property which he would put in his safe, and later I found out that he had been keeping large sums of his own money in his safe in similar large brown envelopes marked on the outside as my property, and sealed with a seal that had 1504 on it, which was the number of my apartments on Seventh Street. At one time he opened one of these envelopes, that was thus sealed and marked as my property, and he counted out $14,000 that was in it in bills of the denomination of $1,000 and $500 each, and I thus found out that he was hiding out in this way large sums of his own money. From time to time he would present me with an envelope containing large sums of bills stating that it was a gift from him to me, but I refused to accept any gift from him, because I knew he was simply trying to get me in his power and get hold of all my property. I returned to Captain Burlingame everything that he ever gave me, and have refused to keep anything that he ever gave me. For one Christmas present he tried to get me to accept $1,500 in bills that he gave me, but I wouldn't accept it. I knew he was doing this simply to get me to let him have my property.

All I want is for Capt. Guy E. Burlingame to let me alone and to let my property alone. I would not have told about this treatment of me if said members of the Gibson committee had not insisted that I do so, claiming that they were entitled to know about same in their congressional investigation of affairs in Washington, for I am afraid of Captain Burlingame and know that he will cause me injury if he can. If I had not gone to Congressman BLANTON and implored him to help me save my property, and if he hadn't arranged extension of my loans by telegraph, I would have lost all of my property that I possess, for I am simply stripped of all money and ready cash by reason of Captain Burlingame's wrongful treatment of me.

HELEN F. BLALOCK.

Sworn to and subscribed by the said Helen F. Blalock before me on this the 19th day of January, A. D. 1929, she having carefully read over her above statement (two pages) before signing, and having approved it as true and correct. Given under my hand and seal of office this January 19, 1929, at Abilene, Tex.

[SEAL.] FLORENCE CLIFTON,
Notary Public in and for Taylor County, Tex.

(My commission expires June 30, 1929.)

Mr. BLANTON. She called my attention, gentlemen, to the fact that in there where she said she disconnected her telephone she did not mean that she had the company take it out, but that she took the receiver down off the hook so that no one could call her, and kept it that way. She called attention to the fact that where she said she had given back everything she called attention to the fact of the ring she turned over to Colonel GIBSON and which we finally turned over to the Department of Justice. I arranged by telegraph with a realtor here to take up the first trust of $7,000 and accrued interest and a second trust of $1,045 in a bank down here. Both were taken up, because they were past due, and the property would have been sold January 15 if it had not been renewed. I arranged by telegraph with a bank to take up a diamond necklace she had pawned with one of the money sharks, which was worth easily $2,500, so a jeweler said, and I had it returned to her, it being a necklace which she had received from her husband during her married life, and that would have been lost if it had not been recovered for her. She had two other fine diamond rings her husband had given her.

I have no interest whatever in this woman. Since I have been in public life when poor people have appealed to me, or people who are helpless, I am just as quick to help them as I am those who are mighty and in authority. It is the poor people who really need help. It is the helpless people who need help most. This woman is a palmist, yet I want to say this to you. There is not a man on this floor but who, if she were to tell you her story as she told it to me in the presence of my office force in Texas, but in whose eyes she would bring tears and you would feel sorry for her and would have helped her as I did, and because I have done it, the newspapers here have continually "jabbed" and attacked me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Texas has consumed one hour.

Mr. BLANTON. I wonder if my colleagues would not give me 10 minutes more. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman does he understand that Captain Burlingame asked to be suspended and he was suspended to-day?

Mr. BLANTON. After the commissioners refused to suspend him, after they had twice refused to do it, and after the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, who means business and gave him to understand what was going to happen, he comes in to-day and begs leave to be suspended.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman has already consumed an hour. If he gets 10 minutes more, will he finish in that time?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The newspapers have been jabbing me instead of trying to help me benefit the people here. They are jabbing me all the time. The Post came out in an editorial this morning attacking the Senate amendment. I hope you gentlemen here will not permit that Senate amendment to go out of the bill. What you ought to do would be to add to it and waive points of order and attach an amendment to the amendment which would say that "not a commissioner or a superintendent of police who had acquiesced in this kind of a situation ought ever to draw another dollar of the people's money from the Treasury." [Applause.]

This man has had a hearing on the question of conduct unbecoming an officer. What does an officer owe to the people? The highest of good faith. Before I made one of these documents public I had this man brought before our committee, and in came his friend Major Hesse and his assistant, Mr. Superintendent Pratt, and a bevy of officers, to protect and shield him. I made a statement to him that if in the introduction of these matters he denied having signed a single one of them I would withdraw that document. Then when he refused to make a statement I read document after document, and I said, "Mr. Officer, if you deny having signed any one of these I will not put them in." Not a denial did he make. He refused to make a statement.

That action in itself was enough to warrant the commissioners in suspending him. Then when they would not do it, Mr. Chairman GIBSON sent them a list of all this evidence, where 21 documents are signed by Guy E. Burlingame with a pen. And the commissioners would not suspend him. When they would not do it, at the other end of the Capitol a distinguished Senator called him to time, and now he comes in and begs to be suspended.

That is a condition that needs to be cleaned up. You Republicans will not stand for that any more than we Democrats do. We are all together on this proposition. I am one of those Democrats who have an abiding faith in the courage of the present occupant of the White House. I have always appreciated his courage, which he manifested in Boston in the great police strike there. He took the bull by the horns and protected the people. I have confidence in his courage and his sense of strict duty to the people. I think it is still possessed by the present occupant of the White House, and I think he will now take the bull by the horns and say that no such police officer shall receive money of the people in the Treasury derived from taxation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This evidence that you have just mentioned you read before your committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Did you read to the committee the affidavit of the woman?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I read it to his face, and he made no denial of it. Here is one check she gave him. Everyone at the District Building knows his signature. This check is for $2,500 that I read to him. I stated, "If you did not indorse it when you got the money, I will withdraw it." Here is a receipt for $8,700 in cash he gave her. This poor woman says that when he signed "G. E. Burlingame" she made him sign "Guy E. Burlingame" right under it, which was the form of signature he usually made at other times. Here are other checks and documents that he signed, lots of them, and these numerous letters, at least 15 of them. Any one of them ought to have caused the commissioners to kick him off the force. Instead of that the commissioners sent him a kind little note. They said, "Please, Mr. Burlingame, if you choose to make any statement, you can do so." He replied that he did not want to make a statement. And the commissioners let him alone.

Mr. ALMON. What was the total amount of money involved?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not had access yet to an adding machine. [Laughter.] It is reported that this man is worth anywhere from $300,000 to $500,000, and he came on the force a poor man without anything.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How long ago?

Mr. BLANTON. About 30 years ago. He is rich now, and he has money in great big chunks hid out all over the city.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to add to my remarks a copy of his police record. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object—and I may not object—is this man going to be given an opportunity at any time or any place to face his accusers?

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you what I would not do if I were that woman, as defenseless as she is. I would not come back here except under the protection of the Department of Justice. Every policeman in Washington is hunting her now. What would they do? It would be worse than an inquisition. The very minute she reached here on a train they would grab her and subject her to torment like that which a Chinaman received some time ago, as you will recall.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have received no reply as to whether this man under suspension is to be entitled to face his accusers. If I do not receive such a reply, I shall object to putting anything else in, to let the gentleman get the right to put in anything in addition to what has been heard by the Members. So I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Would not the gentleman like to hear the official police record of this officer?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to my friend that I did not intend to speak further at this Congress, but I will get the time to read this police record later.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is all right. The gentleman is master of his own procedure.

Mr. BLANTON. Because I know how to do it under the rules.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understood the gentleman, he charged that this man was receiving so much from McCormick and a lot of these other gamblers?

Mr. BLANTON. That is the report that came to me and that now comes to us.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman witnesses as to that?

Mr. BLANTON. I had witnesses at that time, and those witnesses would have gone down there and faced Burlingame before the commissioners, but I do not know whether they would do it now or not, because every policeman who testified at the trial of that young officer has been hamstrung by the department and practically every one of them has been kicked off of the force.

Mr. WINGO. Why were not those witnesses taken before the grand jury, where Burlingame would have been indicted, if you could prove that McCormick was paying him $300 a month and you had witnesses who would testify to that fact, in which event it would not be necessary to bring Mrs. Blalock here.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend that at that very time and at that very hearing, when we had that truck up, we had reliable policemen who testified that the foreman of the grand jury, Mr. McQuade, had come to them and kept officers from serving warrants against gamblers. They openly charged him with that, and they were reliable policemen, policemen who were testified to be the best on the force. And it was at McQuade's brother-in-law's house that all of these frame-up affidavits against Staples were drawn up, these affidavits against this young policeman; it was at McQuade's brother-in-law's house that was done, and we had a policeman, an inspector and a captain, who all lied about it when we asked them where it was, but finally admitted it after we had to bring in a number of witnesses to prove it.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Suppose the grand jury should have heard all of this evidence and found a bill of indictment against Burlingame, what hope would the gentleman have of finding a petit jury in this District that would convict him?

Mr. BLANTON. I am doing everything I can to locate this woman, and I promise Congress this: That if I locate her I will get her to come back here, but it will be under the protection of the Department of Justice. I promise that. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. If there is no further time desired in general debate, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION. 1. That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to locate and construct in the District of Columbia, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and after consultation with the Commission of Fine Arts, as appropriations shall be provided therefor, artificial bathing pools or beaches, not exceeding 12 in number, with suitable buildings, shower baths, lockers, provisions for the use of filtered water, purification of the water, and all things necessary for the proper conduct of such pools or beaches, and to conduct and maintain the same. The cost of construction of any of these pools or beaches, with buildings and equipment, shall not exceed $200,000 each, and the appropriation of the sums necessary for the purposes named is hereby authorized.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN: Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN: Page 2, line 11, strike out the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 2, line 12, after the word "authorized," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "to be paid in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 2, line 23, after the word "beach," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "such fees to be paid weekly to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCHAFER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5758) amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FREE TEXTBOOKS

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12739) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that request.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12739; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the ranking minority member and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12739; and pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the ranking minority Member. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12739, with Mr. LEAVITT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather important bill and I think we ought to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall provide pupils of elementary schools, junior high schools, and senior high schools of the District of Columbia free of charge with the use of all textbooks, supplemental books, and other necessary educational books and supplies.

SEC. 2. That all books purchased by the Board of Education shall be held as property of the District of Columbia and shall be loaned to pupils under such conditions as the Board of Education may prescribe.

SEC. 3. That parents and guardians of pupils shall be responsible for all books loaned to the children in their charge and shall be held liable for the full price of every such book destroyed, lost, or so damaged as to be made unfit for use by other pupils.

SEC. 4. That the Board of Education shall purchase for use in the public schools only such books and supplies as shall have been duly recommended by the superintendent of schools and formally approved by the Board of Education.

SEC. 5. That the Board of Education, in its discretion, is authorized to make exchange or to sell books or other educational supplies which are no longer desired for school use.

SEC. 6. That the Board of Education is authorized to provide for the necessary expenses of purchase, distribution, care, and preservation of said textbooks, supplementary books, and educational supplies out of money appropriated under the authority of this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation is to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils in the high schools of the District of Columbia. Existing law provides that these facilities and free textbooks shall be furnished to children in the elementary schools, but not to children in the junior high schools or the senior high schools of the District of Columbia.

It is estimated that the total cost to the District government will be $242,000 for the first year and $100,000 a year thereafter. This bill was urged before your committee by the Teachers' Association of the District, and has the indorsement of the American Federation of Teachers.

The furnishing of textbooks to the pupils of all schools is mandatory in the States of Arizona, Maryland, Nevada, Rhode Island, California, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Texas, Montana, New Jersey, Wyoming, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, except for the city of Wilmington, where these books are furnished by the local board of education.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will not the gentleman add that New York City furnishes free textbooks to scholars in all the grades of the schools?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will be very pleased to add that city as one of the cities that furnishes free textbooks and free educational supplies to the pupils of that city.

I sincerely hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield for an observation?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The State of Texas, which I represent in part, has had similar legislation for the last several years, and I want to bear testimony at this point that it seems to meet with universal satisfaction and approval of the people, and I do not think our State would consider for a moment going back to the old method. I also want to state that this bill meets with my hearty approval. I think the District of Columbia ought to have it, and I believe it is a forward step advancing the cause of education in the District.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I am very glad to have that contribution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to find out whether or not the law relating to the elementary schools places the same responsibility upon the parents as will be placed upon them under section 3 of this bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I could not answer without consulting the law, but I presume it does.

Mr. McCORMACK. The only observation I want to make is that it seems to me if we lend books we should not place the responsibility upon the parents of reimbursing for any damage that might be done by the children.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I think that is a necessary precaution.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to that statement, if that is not the situation now, it will be true hereafter.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KETCHAM. I understood the gentleman to say in his opening statement that existing law provided that the books are supplied for the children in the so-called elementary grades but are not provided for the pupils in the junior high or the senior high; is that correct?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is correct.

Mr. KETCHAM. Of course, the gentleman is aware that the classification of schools into junior high schools and senior high schools is comparatively recent. Is it the fact that under the old classification children up to and including the eighth grade did not have these books supplied to them? The gentleman understands, of course, that the classification of most junior high schools now takes in what are known as grades 7, 8, and 9, and I was wondering whether that was clearly set out and I want to ask the gentleman to make a statement covering that point. It just occurred to me that under the general law, if it were written a great many years ago, providing for the supplying of free textbooks for pupils in the elementary grades, that would include pupils in the grades up to and including the eighth grade.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; it does. That is my understanding of the regulations or the law here. Up to and including the eighth grade the books are furnished free and after the eighth grade the books must be purchased by the pupils.

Mr. KETCHAM. Then the bill we have under consideration now simply adds that free books shall be provided for those coming under the old classification of high schools, namely, beginning with the ninth grade and including the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grades?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HALL of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. HALL of Indiana. I think it would clear matters to say that there is no general definition of the junior high school. Different schools in different sections group different classes under that head. I think here in the District, where we have certain classes designated as the junior high school, it takes in the eighth and ninth grades. This bill will extend it throughout the whole and make unnecessary a definition of the junior high school.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. There has been some complaint about children attending the District schools who live outside of the District. Personally I have taken the ground that they should be allowed to attend, but I doubt if the District ought to furnish free schoolbooks to those pupils. Has the gentleman given any thought to that matter, of the District buying books for children who live outside the District?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have not given that any thought at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is not further discussion, the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the time for debate was given to the gentleman from Maryland and the ranking member of the District Committee. The ranking member of the District Committee has stepped out a few minutes for lunch, but there are two or three questions that have occurred to me that I would like to ask about the bill for my own information. I notice in the first section it provides for purchasing supplemental books and other educational books, "and supplies." What is the significance of "supplies"—what does that cover?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I suppose that means the usual supplies to school children, such as pencils, copybooks, and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the purchase price for these books taken out of the District funds, or does a portion of it come out of the lump sum?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is according to the way you figure it. As the gentleman knows, Congress has made an appropriation of $9,000,000 in a lump sum for the District. This bill provides that the expenses shall be paid as other appropriations for the District of Columbia. If the House and Senate appropriates a lump sum of $9,000,000, it seems to me that it would not make much difference whether the purchase is charged against that sum or not; it would make no difference in the appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, as a matter of fact, a part of the money for the purchase of the schoolbooks does come out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That depends entirely on the method of computation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought the chairman might give me some direct information. I query whether it is entirely equitable for the taxpayers in other parts of the country to have to make a contribution toward the school books for children in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Are these books handed down from one class to another?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is there any provision in the bill as to their being fumigated?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The bill says nothing about it.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. They ought to be fumigated.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That will be taken care of through the Health Department. That is the case in my city.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further discussion, the Clerk will read the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEAVITT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12739 and had reported the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VACATING ALLEY BETWEEN LOTS 16 AND 17, SQUARE 1083, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3771) vacating the alley between lots 16 and 17, square 1083, District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the bill S. 3771, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3771; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the ranking minority member of the committee and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3771; and pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the ranking minority member of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman also to add to his request that debate be limited to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I shall be very glad to add that to my request.

The SPEAKER. And that debate be limited to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why that limitation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is a very important bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But some gentleman may have observations on a matter of general public interest that he may desire to make. It may be that this is the only opportunity he might be able to have this session.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not insist on my limitation, but it is an important bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself, and one-half by the ranking minority member of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3771.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3771, with Mr. LEAVITT in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close, vacate, and abandon so much of the 15-foot public alley in square 1083 as lies between lots 16 and 17; same to revert in equal proportion to the abutting lots.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the District commissioners to vacate a portion of an alley shown on the highway plats, but not actually opened or existent. The commissioners deem the actual opening of the alley inadvisable because of the differences in street grades, which would necessitate expensive retaining walls if the alley should be opened. I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further time desired for general debate, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEAVITT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3771, and directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FREE OPERATORS' PERMITS TO ENLISTED MEN

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1281) to amend section 7 (a) of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), as amended by section 2 of the act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 812), so as to provide operators' permits free of cost to enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard operating Government-owned vehicles in the District of Columbia, on the Union Calendar, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the bill S. 1281, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 (a) of the act known as the "District of Columbia traffic act, 1925," approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), as amended by section 2 of the act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 812), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard shall be issued, without charge, a permit to operate Government-owned vehicles, upon the presentation of a certificate from their commanding officers to the effect that they are assigned to operate a Government vehicle and are qualified to drive, and upon proving to the satisfaction of the director of traffic that they are familiar with the traffic regulations of the District of Columbia."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "vehicles," insert "while engaged in official business."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TEACHERS' SALARY ACT

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12956) to amend certain sections of the teachers' salary act, approved June 4, 1924, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following quoted provisions of Article I, covering salary class 2, teachers in junior high schools, are hereby repealed:

"CLASS 2.—TEACHERS IN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS

"A teacher in the junior high schools who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the elementary schools and who in addition has met the higher eligibility requirements established by the Board of Education for teachers in junior high schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules:

"A teacher in the junior high schools who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the senior high and normal schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules," so that the salary schedules, as amended, shall read as follows:

"CLASS 2.—TEACHERS IN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS

"Group A: A basic salary of $1,600 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,400 per year is reached.

"Group B: A basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

"Group C: A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

"Group D: A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached."

SEC. 2. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to establish the eligibility requirements and prescribe such methods of appointment or promotion for teachers in the junior high schools as it may deem proper, subject to provisions of law covering such matters now in effect or which may hereafter be enacted.

SEC. 3. That the following provision of section 9 of Article V of the act of June 4, 1924, "Provided further, That no person who has not received for at least one year the maximum salary of Group A in any class, or Group C of class 2 shall be eligible for promotion to Group B of any class or Group D of class 2," shall not apply during the fiscal year 1928 to the teachers affected by the provisions of paragraph (d) of section 6 of the same act.

SEC. 4. Amend paragraph (q) of section 6 of Article IV by adding the following:

"Provided further, That in the case of trade teachers in regularly organized trade schools the Board of Education is authorized to credit approved experience in the trades in the same manner and to the same extent as though it were experience in teaching."

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WOMAN'S BUREAU, METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6664, on the Union Calendar No. 239.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6664) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation in reference to this bill as he understands it. On last March 26 the bill was being considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by unanimous consent. A number of committee amendments had been offered and are now pending. The Chair thinks the consent hitherto granted would prevail during the consideration of the bill at this time, so the bill is called up to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. The proceedings thus far are still applicable to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments offered at that time.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLADAY. Has the time passed when I can offer an amendment to section 1?

The SPEAKER. No; that will come later, after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HOLADAY. It has never been offered, though.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to offer his amendment to a committee amendment, or is it a separate amendment?

Mr. HOLADAY. No; it is to the bill proper.

The SPEAKER. The House will first dispose of the committee amendments. The Clerk will report the committee amendments now pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "to consist" and insert the words "in charge."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "with the rank of assistant superintendent."

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "with the rank of captain."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "and," insert "not more than."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "six of whom shall be between the ages of 35 and 45."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out all of lines 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and line 7 down to and including the word "members" and insert "any policemen who may from time to time be detailed to the woman's bureau."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "director," insert "while so detailed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out "one case supervisor; three patrol supervisors."

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, the woman's bureau at the present time consists of a force of 23, I believe. This bill is establishing the bureau as a matter of law where at the present time it is provided for only under police regulation. The bill provides for a director, for an assistant director, and this bill attempts to provide for one case superintendent and three patrol supervisors. I am of the opinion that these positions are unnecessary because you are getting more directors, assistants, supervisors, patrol officers, and so forth, than you will have privates, and after these provisions are written into law it will mean added appropriations in the years to come. If at any time it becomes necessary to have these additional positions, they can be provided for under general regulations.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the figure "(1)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "be," strike out all of line 21, lines 22, 23, 24, 25, and on down to and including line 5 on page 3, and insert "in accordance with the United States civil-service standards existing January 1, 1928."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, strike out the letter "(c)" and insert the letter "(b)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, strike out the words "except as otherwise provided in this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, strike out the word "same" and after the word "rules" strike out the word "and" and after the word "and" where it occurs the second time strike out the words "to the same."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, strike out the word "as" and strike out all of lines 16, 17, and 18, and insert "prescribed in the Manual of the Metropolitan Police Department as adopted by the commissioners' order of October 5, 1923, effective December 1, 1923, with amendments to September 15, 1926."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, after the word "and" strike out the word "they."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 5, strike out the words "annual salaries of the."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 6, after the word "shall" strike out the words "be as follows: The director, the assistant director, and the private shall."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 9, after the word "rank," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 12, strike out, after "SEC. 4," all of line 12 down to and including line 20 and insert "The purpose and functions of the woman's bureau shall be in accordance with the Manual of the Metropolitan Police Department as adopted by the commissioners' order of October 5, 1923, effective December 1, 1923, with amendments to September 15, 1926."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 5, after the word "act," strike out the comma and all the remainder of the paragraph down to and including the word "Provided," in line 14.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 22, after the word "States," strike out the comma and the remainder of line 22 and all of line 23 and insert "such clerical force."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 3936, to regulate the practice of the healing art and to protect the public health in the District of Columbia, which is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up Senate bill 3936, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of this act the following words and phrases have the meanings assigned to them, respectively, except where the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Disease" means any blemish, defect, deformity, infirmity, disorder, disease, or injury of the human body or mind, and pregnancy, and the effects of any of them.

(b) "The healing art" means the art of detecting or attempting to detect the presence of any disease; of determining or attempting to determine the nature and state of any disease, if present; of preventing, relieving, correcting, or curing, or of attempting to prevent, relieve, correct, or cure any disease; of safeguarding or attempting to safeguard the life of any woman and infant through pregnancy and parturition; and of doing or attempting to do any of the acts enumerated above: Provided, That for the purposes of this act the term "the healing art" does not include—

(1) Dentistry as defined in an act entitled "An act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto," approved June 6, 1892, as amended by acts approved June 7, 1924, and March 4, 1927; nor

(2) Podiatry as defined in an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia," approved May 23, 1918; nor

(3) Optometry as defined in an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia," approved May 28, 1924; nor

(4) Pharmacy as defined in an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906, as amended by an act approved March 4, 1924; nor

(5) Nursing as defined in an act entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia," approved February 9, 1907.

(c) "To practice" means to do or to attempt to do, or to hold oneself out or to allow oneself to be held out as ready to do, any act enumerated in subsection (b) of this section as constituting a part of the healing art, for a fee, gift, or reward, or in anticipation of any fee, gift, or reward, whether tangible or intangible.

(d) "Commission" means the commission on licensure to practice the healing art, created by this act.

(e) "Board" means a board of examiners created by this act.

(f) "Drugless healing" means any system of healing that does not resort to the use of drugs, medicine, or operative surgery for the prevention, relief, or cure of any disease.

(g) "School" means any school, college, or university.

SEC. 2. No person shall practice the healing art in the District of Columbia who is not (a) licensed so to do, or (b) if exempted from licensure under section 42 of this act, then duly registered.

SEC. 3. No person shall practice the healing art in the District of Columbia otherwise than in accordance with the terms of his license or of his registration, as the case may be.

SEC. 4. There is hereby created a commission on licensure to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia, consisting of the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the United States Commissioner of Education, the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, the superintendent of public schools of the District of Columbia, and the health officer of the District of Columbia, each ex officio. The commission shall elect a president and a vice president. The health officer shall be the secretary and treasurer of the commission. The commission shall make and from time to time may alter such rules as it deems necessary for the conduct of its business and for the execution and enforcement of the provisions of this act. It shall adopt a common seal, and from time to time alter the same as to it seems proper. The courts shall take judicial notice of such seal.

SEC. 5. The commission shall establish minimum standards of preprofessional and professional education in the healing art and may establish minimum standards for hospitals for interne training. It may determine whether preprofessional and professional schools, and whether hospitals, attain such standards. It shall keep a record of its investigations and determinations with respect to all schools and hospitals and shall approve and enter in a proper register every school and every hospital attaining the prescribed standard or which had attained such standard during its existence. The commission may redetermine from time to time the standing of any school or hospital and may revise its register accordingly. The commission shall give no credit for any certificate, diploma, or degree emanating from any school, and it may refuse to give any credit for any certificate or diploma emanating from any hospital not duly registered as provided by this act: Provided, That this requirement as to registration shall not apply in the case of persons applying for license on years of practice under the provisions of section 24 of this act.

SEC. 6. The commission shall receive, number consecutively, and record all applications presented in due form for licenses and for registration; but such applications may be classified according to their respective purposes and numbered consecutively and registered according to the several classes thus established. If the commission finds that an applicant is entitled to a license by virtue of an outstanding license to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia or by virtue of years of practice, under the provisions of section 24 of this act, or by virtue of reciprocity, under the provisions of section 25, it shall issue to him a license accordingly. If the commission finds that an applicant has submitted satisfactory proof of age, moral character, preprofessional education, professional education, and, if required by the commission, of hospital training, but must be subjected to an examination to determine his professional fitness, under section 26, it shall certify him to the proper examining board for that purpose; and upon receipt of a report from any such board, satisfactory to the commission, showing that the applicant has passed such an examination, the commission, being of the opinion that the applicant is in all other respects legally qualified, shall issue to him a license to practice the healing art in the manner described in his application and as authorized by law in whatever class the commission shall find him qualified to so practice.

SEC. 7. The commission may (a) appoint, suspend, and remove such examiners, counsel, clerks, inspectors, and other officers and employees as may be authorized by law; (b) enter into contracts for the use and occupancy of such quarters as may be necessary for its purposes; but the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to furnish such quarters, without cost to the commission, if the necessary space is available in any building under their control; and (c) buy such supplies as may be necessary for its work and for the execution and enforcement of this act: Provided, That the commission incurs no indebtedness in excess of money actually available.

SEC. 8. The commission shall appoint boards of examiners as follows: (a) A board of examiners in the basic sciences; (b) a board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy; and (c) a board of examiners in chiropractic. The commission shall appoint (d) a board of examiners in midwifery; and (e) such other boards of examiners in drugless healing as are necessary under the provisions of this act. The board of examiners in the basic sciences and the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy shall each consist of five members. Boards of examiners in midwifery and boards of examiners in drugless healing may consist of three to five members, as the commission deems proper. No examiner shall be appointed for a term longer than five years, and all appointments shall be made so that the term of one member of each board shall expire on the 31st day of December of each year. The commission shall appoint no person as a member of any such board who is not a citizen of the United States and who has not been a resident of the District of Columbia for at least three years immediately preceding his appointment. The commission may appoint as members of such boards persons employed in the service of the Federal Government and of the government of the District of Columbia; and persons so employed may accept such appointment and may receive such compensation for their services as examiners as may be provided by law and by the regulations of the commission. A member of any board is not debarred by such membership from employment under the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia not inconsistent with the discharge of his duties as a member of such board.

SEC. 9. Each examining board shall elect a chairman and a secretary and may make such rules regarding the discharge of its duties as the commission may approve. Each board shall conduct examinations and make reports as required by law and by the rules of the commission.

SEC. 10. The commission shall appoint the several members of the board of examiners in the basic sciences so that there will be on said board at all times one or more members capable of determining whether applicants have or have not a sufficient knowledge of the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology to enable such applicants to understand and to apply such sciences in the study and practice of the healing art. No member of the board of examiners in the basic sciences shall teach or practice the healing art while serving in that capacity.

SEC. 11. The commission shall refer to the board of examiners in the basic sciences every applicant for a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia, except those entitled to licenses by virtue of licenses to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia outstanding at the time of the approval of this act, or by virtue of years of practice of osteopathy or some form of drugless healing in the District of Columbia at that time, for determination of the applicant's ability to understand and to apply the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology to the study and practice of the healing art. The commission shall refer such applicants so that the board of examiners in the basic sciences and any member of that board shall not know the method of practice the applicant has studied or the method of practice he intends to follow. The board of examiners in the basic sciences may examine any applicant referred to it, but it may accept in lieu of examination proof that the applicant has passed, before a board of examiners in the basic sciences, by whatsoever name it may be known, or before any examining or licensing board in the healing art as that art is hereinbefore defined, of any State, Territory, or other jurisdiction under the United States, or of any foreign country, an examination in anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology, as comprehensive and as exhaustive as that required in the District of Columbia under authority of this act. The board of examiners in the basic sciences shall report its findings to the commission. An applicant who is reported by the board as qualified in the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology, but who is not entitled to a license to practice the healing art, without examination, shall be certified by the commission to the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy, or a board of examiners in drugless healing, as the case may be, for determination of his professional fitness. An applicant who is reported by the board as qualified in said sciences and who is entitled to a license by reciprocity, without examination, shall thereupon be given such a license. The commission shall issue no license to practice the healing art to any person who has not been reported by the board of examiners in the basic sciences as qualified in the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology, except to such persons as are entitled to licenses by virtue of licenses to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia outstanding at the time of the approval of this act and by virtue of years of practice of osteopathy or some form of drugless healing in said district prior to approval of this act, and except to applicants for licenses to practice midwifery.

SEC. 12. The commission shall appoint as members of the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy persons who have been graduated with the degree of doctor of medicine, doctor of osteopathy, or some equivalent degree by a school registered under this act and who have taught or practiced, or taught and practiced, medicine and surgery or osteopathy for not less than five consecutive years, the last three of which, at least, immediately preceding their respective appointments, have been in the District of Columbia.

The board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy shall be composed of four practitioners of medicine and surgery, one of whom shall be an adherent of the homeopathic school, and an osteopath. The degrees doctor of medicine and doctor of osteopathy shall be accorded the same rights and privileges under governmental regulations. They shall examine into the qualifications of all persons referred to them who desire to practice medicine and osteopathy. The questions propounded to such applicants shall be identical in every respect; with the exception of questions in the practice of medicine and practice of osteopathy which shall be propounded to applicants of these respective schools only, as the case may be, and the replies shall be examined and graded by the member or members of the board representing such schools of practice.

The board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy shall certify to the commission applicants whom they have found qualified to be licensed to practice medicine and surgery, or osteopathy and surgery, as the case may be.

SEC. 13. The commission shall refer to the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy every applicant for a license to practice the healing art who does not intend and in his application agree to limit his practice to some named drugless method of healing and who is not entitled to a license without examination: Provided, That no applicant shall be certified to the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy for examination who has not been reported by the board of examiners in the basic sciences as qualified in the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology.

SEC. 14. On petition of five or more adherents of any drugless method of healing, the commission shall appoint a board of examiners to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia according to that method. Every such petitioner, at the time of signing the petition, shall have practiced the healing art in some manner, not necessarily in the manner described in the petition, for not less than five consecutive years immediately preceding, in the District of Columbia. The petition shall define the method of healing for which an examining board is desired, so as clearly to differentiate that method from the unrestricted practice of the healing art. The petition shall show as nearly as may be the number of schools teaching the method of healing described in it, and shall show the nature and extent of the facilities available for the education and training of practitioners of that method. It shall supply such other information as the commission may designate. The petition shall be sworn to by each of the petitioners to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Upon the filing of proper petition for the appointment of an examining board to determine the qualifications of applicants for licenses to practice according to the method of healing defined in the petition, the commission shall by resolution provide for the appointment of such a board and define exactly the method of practice to be covered by it and to be pursued by applicants licensed after examination by it. After the adoption of any such resolution the commission shall from time to time appoint boards to examine such applicants as may apply for licenses to practice the method of healing defined in such resolution. The commission shall appoint as members of any such board persons of good repute who have been graduated with some degree appropriate to the method of practice that the appointee has followed or intends to follow, by some school registered under this act, and who have somewhere taught or practiced, or taught and practiced, the method of healing defined in the resolution for not less than five years immediately preceding their respective appointments, under authority of licenses empowering them so to do. In making such appointments, however, the commission shall give preference, when circumstances permit and other things are equal, to persons who have taught or practiced, or taught and practiced, the healing art according to the method defined in the resolution, in the District of Columbia, under licenses authorizing them so to do, for not less than three years immediately preceding their respective appointments: Provided, That any adherent of a method of healing for which the commission has provided a board of examiners, who has been graduated with an appropriate degree by some school representative of that method, who has practiced according to that system in the District of Columbia for not less than five consecutive years immediately preceding the approval of this act, and who is entitled to a license, without examination, by virtue of the provisions of section 24 of this act, is eligible for appointment as a member of that board.

SEC. 15. The commission shall refer to the appropriate board of examiners in drugless healing every applicant for a license to practice the healing art according to any method of drugless healing defined by the commission, who intends and in his application agrees to limit his practice to the system so defined, for determination of the applicant's fitness so to practice, and who is not entitled to a license to practice without examination: Provided, That no applicant shall be certified to any board of examiners in drugless healing who has not been reported by the board of examiners in the basic sciences as qualified in the sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology.

SEC. 16. The commission may appoint, from time to time, as it deems expedient, a board of examiners in midwifery, consisting of not less than three and not more than five persons, who have practiced the healing art in the District of Columbia for not less than three years immediately preceding their respective appointments, under authority of licenses authorizing them so to practice. Appointments to such boards shall be made for such terms as the commission deems proper. The commission may abolish any such board at any time.

SEC. 17. The commission shall refer to a board of examiners in midwifery every applicant for a license to practice midwifery who intends and in her application agrees to limit her practice to the care of women during normal pregnancy and parturition, in so far as the licentiate is able to determine whether pregnancy and parturition are normal in any particular case, for determination of the applicant's fitness so to practice, and who is not entitled to a license by virtue of an outstanding license to practice midwifery in the District of Columbia in force at the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 18. Examinations shall be held by the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy, the boards of examiners in drugless healing, and the board of examiners in midwifery, beginning on the second Monday in January and July of each year and at such other times as the commission may by rule or by special order determine. Examinations shall be held by the board of examiners in the basic sciences at such times as the commission may by rule or by special order determine, having due relation to the dates of the examinations held by the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy and the boards of examiners in drugless healing. The commission shall publish notice of the time and place of each examination and of other pertinent information concerning it, not less than 30 days before the first day of each such examination, in one or more newspapers of local circulation and, except in so far as relates to examinations for licenses to practice midwifery, in one or more medical or osteopathic journals of national circulation; and if there be any board or boards of examiners in drugless healing, then in a journal or journals, if there be any, of national circulation, representing a method or methods of healing corresponding to the method or methods represented by such board or boards.

SEC. 19. The commission shall by rule prescribe the nature and extent of the examinations to be conducted by each of the examining boards. All applicants examined by the board of examiners in the basic sciences shall be subjected to the same examination and rated on the same scale, as nearly as may be. All applicants, except applicants for licenses to practice midwifery, shall be subjected to the same examination and rated on the same scale, by the respective examining boards to which they are referred by the commission, in the diagnosis and prevention of communicable disease. Every examination shall be in writing, in the English language, but each shall be supplemented, if practicable, by laboratory and clinical tests and, if the commission deems proper, may be supplemented by oral examinations. Every examination shall be conducted, so far as the character of the examination permits, so that no examining board and no member thereof shall know the identity of the person examined. In any one examination by any one board the questions propounded to and the problems set for each applicant shall be as nearly the same as the character of the examination will permit. As a guide for determining whether an applicant has or has not passed, the commission shall fix by rule a uniform standard for all applicants, except that the commission may fix maximum credits to be allowed for such experience as the applicant may have had as a licensed practitioner and in the discretion of the commission may require an applicant claiming any such credit to be subjected to clinical and laboratory tests to demonstrate what credit he shall be allowed, if any. The general rules formulated by the commission to govern examinations may be modified with respect to examinations conducted by the board of examiners in the basic sciences and by boards of examiners in midwifery, in so far as the nature and function of the examinations conducted by those boards require. Except as hereinbefore stated, all examinations shall conform as nearly as may be to a uniform standard, to the end that every licensed practitioner of the healing art in the District of Columbia may conform so far as may be possible to a single uniform standard of professional fitness.

SEC. 20. The board of examiners in the basic sciences, the board of examiners in medicine and osteopathy, and each board of examiners in drugless healing before which any applicant is to appear at the next ensuing examination, shall submit to the commission, not less than 10 days before each examination, such questions as may be required by the rules of the commission governing examinations. The commission shall cause the questions so submitted to be prepared for distribution and to be distributed in the course of the examination at appropriate times; but from the questions submitted by the several examining boards in the diagnosis and prevention of communicable diseases, the commission shall select the questions to be used, and if the commission deems proper may revise and supplement such questions, and shall submit to all applicants appearing at any one examination the identical questions with respect to the subject named.

SEC. 21. The commission shall provide the place or places and all necessary facilities for examinations, including such supervisors or proctors as the commission deems necessary. The commission shall assign to each applicant a number under which his examination shall be conducted, with a view to the concealment of the identity of the examinee from the examiner, so far as may be practicable. The supervisor or proctor designated by the commission shall collect all examination papers and deliver them or cause them to be delivered to the several examiners who are to examine them. Each examining board shall, as speedily as possible, examine all applicants referred to it and report its findings to the commission. All reports of written examinations shall be made under the numbers of the several examinees and not under their names; but each board shall report to the commission, under the names of the several examinees, the results of the clinical and laboratory tests and of the oral examination, if any, to which the examinee has been subjected. The written and the oral examination and the clinical and the laboratory tests shall each be rated on a basis of 100, and the reports of the several boards of examiners shall be made accordingly. The relative weight to be given to each, the passing grade, and the weight to be allowed for experience shall be fixed by the commission by regulations. The final standing of each applicant shall be determined by the commission in accordance therewith.

SEC. 22. The commission shall carefully consider the reports of the board of examiners in the basic sciences and of the examining board by which any applicant has been examined purporting to show the qualifications of the applicant. If the commission is satisfied that the applicant is qualified to practice the healing art in accordance with law and within the limits fixed by his application, the commission shall issue to him a license attesting that fact and authorizing him so to practice in whatever class of practice the commission has found him qualified, so long as that license is unsuspended and unrevoked. All reports of examining boards and all questions to and answers by applicants in written examinations shall be open to inspection by any person who shows to the satisfaction of the commission that he has some proper interest in them. All examination papers shall be preserved by the commission for a period of not less than two years. The commission shall record all licenses in a book kept for that purpose, which shall be duly indexed. Licenses shall be consecutively numbered, except that licenses of different classes may be numbered and recorded in separate series. Licenses shall show on their faces the class of practice for which they are issued, and licentiates shall display the same prominently in their offices at all times.

SEC. 23. Any person desiring to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia shall apply to the commission, in writing, for authority so to do. The application shall be in such form and accompanied by such evidence of the qualifications of the applicant as the commission requires. Each application shall show whether the applicant (a) seeks a license (1) on the basis of a license to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia, under section 24 of this act; (2) on the basis of years of practice, under section 24; (3) on the basis of reciprocity, under section 25; or (4) on the basis of examination, under section 26; or (b) seeks registration as a person exempted from licensure, under section 42. Each application shall be accompanied by a fee, as follows: For a license on the basis of a license to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia, a fee of $1; on the basis of years of practice in the District of Columbia, a fee of $25; for a license on the basis of reciprocity, a fee of $50; for certification of applications for license by reciprocity in other jurisdictions, a fee of $10; for a license on the basis of examination, a fee of $25; for registration as a person exempted from license, a fee of $1; but physicians and surgeons of the United States Army, Navy, and Public Health Service, and medical officers in any other branch of the Federal Government whatsoever, and practitioners of the healing art residing within and licensed by States bordering on the District of Columbia, who do not maintain an office or appoint places where patients may be met within the District of Columbia, applying for registration as persons exempted from licensure in the District of Columbia, shall not be required to pay any fee in connection with any such application. The commission may, on showing of any adequate cause, refund to an applicant for a license on the basis of examination any or all of the fee paid by him, prior to the reference of his application to an examining board for consideration, and thereafter if the applicant is by reason of sickness or other adequate cause prevented from entering the examination, the commission may refund not more than 50 per cent of such fee. An applicant for a license by reciprocity who fails to establish his right to such a license, and an applicant for registration as a person exempted from licensure who fails to establish his right to such registration, may be repaid by the commission not to exceed 80 per cent of the amount deposited by him with his application.

SEC. 24. Every person licensed to practice medicine and surgery or to practice midwifery in the District of Columbia under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia," as approved June 3, 1896, as amended, who desires to continue so to practice after this act becomes effective, shall apply for a license so to do. As soon as practicable after the approval of this act the commission shall by publication give notice of this requirement in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the District of Columbia and in one or more medical journals of national circulation. Application for such relicensing shall be made within 90 days after the publication of such notice. A licentiate who within the time thus limited applies for relicensing may continue to practice until the commission has acted on his application and granted to him a new license, if he be entitled thereto. A licentiate who fails to make application for relicensing within the time thus limited, but who later makes such application, shall not practice until after a new license, if the commission finds him entitled thereto, has been issued to him. After five years after the approval of this act the commission shall issue no license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia on the basis of a license to practice medicine and surgery or to practice midwifery, in the District of Columbia, in force on the date of its approval. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall show whether the licentiate was licensed in the first instance on the basis of a diploma and of registration without examination, or on the basis of examination, and shall show the date of such original registration, if there be any, and of such original license.

Any person who was engaged in the practice of osteopathy in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, may deliver to the commission, within 90 days after the approval of this act, a written application for a license to practice osteopathy and surgery in the District of Columbia, together with satisfactory proof that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated school or college of osteopathy, and had been actively engaged in the practice of osteopathy for the past 10 years, or had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated college of osteopathy whose requirements were equal to those recognized by the American Osteopathic Association.

When the commission is satisfied as to the qualifications of the applicant as aforesaid, it shall issue to him a license to practice osteopathy and surgery: Provided, That the commission may, in its discretion, issue to such applicants licenses to practice osteopathy only, which licenses shall not permit the practice of surgery unless they satisfy the commission that they have had adequate clinical facilities at their respective colleges of graduation, or by hospital work, to enable them to practice surgery. Each license so to do shall show that it was issued on the basis of years of practice in the District of Columbia and without examination.

Any person who was engaged in the practice of chiropractic in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, may deliver to the commission, within 90 days after the approval of this act, a written application for license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia, together with satisfactory proof that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and had previously obtained a diploma from some legally chartered or incorporated and duly established school or college of chiropractic and was actually engaged in the practice of chiropractic in said District on January 1, 1928.

When the commission is satisfied as to the qualifications of the applicant as aforesaid, it shall issue to him a license to practice chiropractic. Each license so to do shall show that it was issued on the basis of actual practice in the District of Columbia without examination.

Any person who has been engaged in the practice of the healing art as defined in this act, in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, according to any other drugless method of healing, who has been graduated with a degree appropriate to the system of drugless healing that he has practiced by a legally chartered or incorporated and duly established school, and who desires to continue so to practice, shall within 90 days after the approval of this act submit proof, satisfactory to the commission, of such date of practice and of graduation, of the fact that he is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and of the name, character, and limits of the method of healing practiced by him. When the commission is satisfied as to the qualifications of the applicant as aforesaid, it shall issue to the applicant a license to practice the healing art in accordance with the system described by the applicant, if recognized by the commission as a named system of drugless healing, which shall be clearly defined and limited in the license so as to distinguish it from all other systems of practice. A license issued in any such case shall show that it was issued on the basis of years of practice and not on the basis of examination.

SEC. 25. An applicant who desires to obtain a license without examination, by virtue of a license issued to him by a State, Territory, or other jurisdiction forming a part of the United States, or by a foreign country, shall submit proof, satisfactory to the commission, that he is not less than 21 years of age and is of good moral character; that he was licensed to practice the healing art in the jurisdiction whence he comes under conditions that at that time would have enabled him to obtain a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia, or to have obtained a license under the provisions of this act were it then in force; that he practiced the healing art under authority of said license for not less than two consecutive years immediately preceding the date of his application, and that he intends, if licensed by the commission, to practice in the District of Columbia. The applicant shall submit, also, proof that the licensing agency of the jurisdiction whence he comes or desires to come grants, without examination, to licentiates of the District of Columbia of the same class, licenses to practice the healing art within its jurisdiction. When the commission is satisfied as to the qualifications of the applicant as aforesaid and as to the readiness of the licensing agency of the jurisdiction whence the applicant comes to license, without examination, licentiates of the licensing agency of the District of Columbia of the same class, the commission shall issue to the applicant a license to practice the healing art corresponding in scope as nearly as may be to the license issued to him by the jurisdiction whence he comes: Provided, That an applicant who has been examined under authority of the commission and who has failed, shall not thereafter be licensed by the commission by virtue of reciprocity with another jurisdiction.

SEC. 26. Each applicant for a license to practice the healing art, to be issued after examination, shall submit with his application proof satisfactory to the commission that he is not less than 21 years of age; that he is of good moral character; that he has had not less than 2 years of preprofessional education and training in a college or university acceptable to the commission before entering on the study of the healing art; that he has studied the healing art through not less that four graded courses of not less than nine months each, in a professional school or schools registered under this act, and has been graduated by such a school with the degree of doctor of medicine, doctor of osteopathy, or some equivalent degree; and, if required by the commission, that he has had not less than one year of training in a hospital registered by the commission under this act: Provided, That an applicant who has had the education and training required above, in preprofessional and professional schools, but whose graduation has been deferred by the professional school he last attended until after he has completed his training in a registered hospital, may be admitted to examination; but no license shall be issued to any such applicant until after he has been graduated from a registered school: Provided further, That an applicant for a license to be issued after examination who was graduated before the approval of this act by a school registered under this act may, if otherwise qualified, be admitted to examination upon proof by the applicant of such preprofessional and professional education and training, and of such graduation, as were required by the laws of the District of Columbia regulating the practice of medicine and surgery at the time of such graduation: Provided further, That an applicant for a license to practice osteopathy and surgery who has been graduated as aforesaid prior to December 31, 1930, shall be examined and licensed on showing that he was graduated by a high school acceptable to the commission before he entered on the study of osteopathy and that he in all other respects is qualified as aforesaid for examination: And provided further, That an applicant for a license to practice drugless healing, who has been graduated before December 31, 1935, may be admitted to examination on proof that before entering on the study of drugless healing he was graduated by a high school acceptable to the commission, and that he in all other respects is qualified as aforesaid for examination, and was graduated by a school registered under this act, teaching the method of healing that he intends to follow, with a degree appropriate to that method of healing, after not less than three graded courses of resident study and training of at least six months each. After December 31, 1935, every such applicant shall be required to submit before he is referred to an examining board for examination, evidence of not less than two years' education in a college acceptable to the commission and not less than four graded resident courses of professional study of not less than nine months each, in the same manner and to the same extent as are required for other applicants for licenses to practice the healing art.

An applicant for a license to practice midwifery shall submit proof, satisfactory to the commission, that before beginning the study of midwifery she had been graduated by a high school acceptable to the commission and thereafter studied midwifery in a school of midwifery registered under this act, for at least two graded courses of six months each, including attendance of not less than 25 cases of labor, and was duly graduated by that school.

SEC. 27. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a court of equity, may suspend or revoke any license issued and any registration effected under this act, upon evidence showing to the satisfaction of the court that the licentiate or registrant, as the case may be, has been guilty of misconduct or is professionally incapacitated.

Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of a license or registration shall be begun by petition filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the name of the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art, or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or of the major and superintendent of police of said District, and shall be verified by oath. Proceedings shall be conducted according to the ordinary rules of equity practice and such supplementary rules as said court may deem expedient to carry into effect the purpose and intent of this act; and said court is hereby authorized to make such supplementary rules. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to the Court of Appeals of said District. Any such appeal on behalf of the commission or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or of the major and superintendent of police of said District may be filed without bond. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may determine whether a license or registration shall be suspended or be revoked, and if such license is to be suspended said court may determine the duration of such suspension and the conditions under which such suspension shall terminate.

SEC. 28. No person shall file or attempt to file with the commission any statement, diploma, certificate, credential, or other evidence when he knows, or when he might by reasonable diligence ascertain, that it is false and misleading.

SEC. 29. No person who has been referred by the commission to an examining board for examination and to whom has been assigned by the commission a number under which to write and deliver his answers in connection with the written examination shall disclose to any examiner, or permit to be disclosed to any examiner, the number so assigned, or in any other avoidable manner enable the examiner to determine the identity of the applicant whose papers he is examining.

SEC. 30. No person shall allow any other person to impersonate him in any manner whatsoever, in obtaining or attempting to obtain any certificate, license, or registration.

SEC. 31. No person shall disclose, directly or indirectly, to an applicant for a license, in advance of any examination or test to which the applicant is to be subjected, any question to be propounded to the applicant or any test to which he is to be subjected. No applicant for a certificate, license, or registration under this act, and no other person whosoever shall procure or undertake to procure any such disclosure.

SEC. 32. No person licensed or registered under this act shall allow any other person to impersonate him in connection with practice under any such license or registration.

SEC. 33. No person shall impersonate a person licensed or registered under this act in connection with the practice of the healing art under such license or registration.

SEC. 34. No person shall alter or forge, or attempt to alter or forge, any diploma or other evidence of graduation in the healing art, or any certificate or evidence of any kind, with the intent that it shall be used to evade the provisions of this act.

SEC. 35. No person shall alter or forge, or attempt to alter or forge, any license or evidence of registration, or counterfeit the seal of the commission, or make any counterfeit impression of that seal.

SEC. 36. No person having any office or duty to perform with respect to the licensing or registration of applicants for licenses and for registration under the provisions of this act shall knowingly rate unfairly or give any unauthorized advantage to, or impose any unfair disadvantages on, any such applicant.

SEC. 37. Any person who swears or affirms to the truth of any matter or opinion that he knows to be false, for the purpose of evading, hindering, or impeding the purposes of this act is guilty of perjury. Any person who swears or affirms falsely, outside of the District of Columbia, if his oath or affirmation be delivered to the commission in said District shall be guilty of perjury in said District and shall be tried and punished under the laws thereof.

SEC. 38. The commission may refuse to license or to register any person for any cause that in the judgment of the commission would, under the provisions of section 27 of this act, authorize the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to suspend or revoke a license or registration, if issued or granted. Before the commission refuses to license or register any applicant for any cause under the provisions of this section, it shall give that applicant an opportunity to be heard in person or by attorney, and to produce witnesses on his behalf. Witnesses may be produced on behalf of the commission and on behalf of any interested person. The attendance and testimony of witnesses may be compelled by subpœna issued by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and said court is hereby authorized to issue and to enforce such subpœnas, on petition of the commission. Any person failing or refusing, without just cause, to appear and testify in response to any such subpœna, or in any way obstructing the course of any hearing to which he has been subpœnaed, is guilty of contempt of court and may be punished as other persons guilty of contempt of court are punished. Any member of the commission may administer oaths at any such hearing. On the petition of any applicant to whom a license or registration has been denied by the commission by virtue of this section, the action of the commission may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on a writ of certiorari, subject to appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in the same manner as appeals are taken in similar cases.

SEC. 39. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 40. If a person licensed or registered under the provisions of this act be convicted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia of any felony, the court, without further hearing or procedure, may suspend for such time and under such conditions as it deems proper, or may revoke, the license or registration of the defendant, in addition to imposing any other penalty provided by law. An appeal by the defendant in any such case from the conviction of the offense shall act as a supersedeas to the judgment of the court suspending or revoking his license or registration.

SEC. 41. The unlawful practice of the healing art may be enjoined by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a court of equity, on petition by the commission, or by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or by the major and superintendent of police of this District; but no such proceeding shall be entertained in advance of the conviction of the person sought to be enjoined, of violation of the provisions of this act. In any such proceeding it shall not be necessary to show that any person is individually injured by the act or acts complained of. No injunction, either temporary or permanent, shall be granted until after final trial and final judgment on the merits of the case, nor until after a hearing is had on the petition. If on the trial it is shown that the respondent has been unlawfully practicing the healing art the court shall perpetually enjoin him from so practicing or continuing to practice, unless and until he has been duly licensed so to do. Procedure in such cases shall be the same as in any other injunction suit, as nearly as may be. The remedy by injunction given hereby is in addition to criminal prosecution and punishment based thereon, and not in lieu thereof. Such cases shall be advanced for trial on the docket of the trial court, and shall be advanced and tried in the appellate court, in the same manner and under the same law and regulations as apply to other suits for injunction.

SEC. 42. The provisions of this act forbidding the practice of the healing art without a license shall not apply (a) to commissioned surgeons of the United States Army, Navy, or Public Health Service, or to medical officers in any other branch of the Federal Government whatsoever, in the discharge of their official duties; nor (b) to practitioners of the healing art duly licensed to practice their respective callings in States or Territories, or in jurisdictions under the control of the Federal Government, or in foreign countries, and actually called from such States, Territories, jurisdictions, or countries, in consultation, to visit specified patients in the District of Columbia or to give demonstrations or clinics under the auspices and for the members of an incorporated organization made up of licensed practitioners of the healing art in the District of Columbia; nor (c) to practitioners licensed to practice their respective callings in States and Territories, and in other jurisdictions forming a part of the United States, or in foreign countries, and called from such States, Territories, jurisdictions, or countries to visit, on their own behalf and not in consultation, specified patients in the District of Columbia: Provided, That all practitioners claiming exemption under the provisions of this section, except those called into the District of Columbia on consultations only, shall file with the commission, in such manner as the commission may prescribe, evidence of their right to such exemption. Upon proof of that right, to the satisfaction of the commission, the commission shall enter the name of the applicant in a register kept for that purpose and shall issue to the applicant a certificate in evidence of such registration.

SEC. 43. The provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to (a) the treatment of any case of actual emergency; or (b) to the practice of massage, or dietetics, or the use of hygienic measures, for the relief of disease or to the practice of any other form of physiotherapy for the relief of disease, or to the practice of X-ray or laboratory technicians, under the direction of a person licensed to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia: Provided, That clinical and radiographic laboratories in operation within the District of Columbia January 1, 1928, may continue to so operate under the provisions of this act; or (c) to the use of ordinary hygienic, dietetic, or domestic remedies: Provided, That such use is not in violation of the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act; or (d) to persons treating human ailments by prayer or spiritual means, as an exercise or enjoyment of religious freedom: Provided, That the laws, rules, and regulations relating to communicable diseases and sanitary matters are not violated; or (e) to the sale, manufacture, or advertising of drugs and medicines: Provided, That the vendor, maker, or advertiser, refrains from any attempt to diagnose: Provided, That it shall not be necessary to negative any of the aforesaid exemptions in any prosecution brought under this act, but the burden of proof of any such exemption shall be on the defendant.

SEC. 44. All money payable under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and be by him deposited as a special fund to the credit of the commission. The commission shall pay from such fund all of the expenses of carrying this act into effect, except such as may be incident to criminal prosecutions and to supervision and investigation with a view to criminal prosecution, the cost of which shall be paid from appropriations in the same manner as the expenses of other criminal prosecutions and supervisory work and investigations incident thereto are paid. Payments by the commission shall be made by check, signed by the president and treasurer of the commission. Members of the several examining boards and all officers and employees of the commission shall be paid at such rates as the commission deems proper.

SEC. 45. As soon as practicable after the approval of this act the Board of Medical Supervisors of the District of Columbia, the Board of Medical Examiners of said District, the Board of Homeopathic Medical Examiners, and the Board of Eclectic Medical Examiners shall deliver to the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia all records and property in their possession, respectively. The Board of Medical Supervisors of the District of Columbia shall transfer to said commission all money remaining to the credit of said board after the payment in full of all outstanding obligations against it; and the money so transferred may be used by the commission to defray the expenses of carrying this act into effect in the same manner as other money coming into the custody of the commission is used for that purpose.

SEC. 46. It shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and of the major and superintendent of police of said District to enforce the provisions of this act. Criminal prosecution shall be conducted by the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia. Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of licenses or registration and toward the issue of injunctions, under the provisions of this act, shall be conducted by said United States district attorney when instituted on behalf of the commission, and by the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia when instituted on behalf of the commissioners of said District or by the major and superintendent of police of said District.

SEC. 47. The commission shall report annually to Congress, on the first Monday in December, its proceedings under the provisions of this act during the next preceding fiscal year, with recommendations for such further legislation as may be necessary to protect the people of the District of Columbia from ignorance and quackery in the practice of the healing art in said District.

SEC. 48. This act may be cited as the "Healing arts practice act, District of Columbia, 1928."

SEC. 49. Matters pending before the Board of Medical Supervisors of the District of Columbia at the time of the approval of this act shall be disposed of by the commission in accordance with the provisions of this act, unless in the judgment of the commission it would be unjust or oppressive so to do; any matter, which in the judgment of the commission, it would be unjust or oppressive so to dispose of, may be disposed of by the commission, in so far as may be practicable, in accordance with the provisions of the law in force when the matter first came before the Board of Medical Supervisors. Criminal prosecutions may be instituted and, if instituted at the time of the approval of this act, may be continued, and penalties may be imposed, under the provisions of the law in force at the time of the alleged offense, notwithstanding the passage of this act. Except as provided above, all laws contrary to this act or inconsistent therewith are hereby repealed.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. There are several Members here who say they want to speak on this bill. They overlooked the time for asking to be recognized and their only chance now would be to move to strike out the last word. Is not that correct?

The SPEAKER. This is a House Calendar bill. The gentleman from Maryland, in charge of the bill, is entitled to one hour, during which he can move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Then they would have to be yielded time by the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will yield time. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. It is a very long bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should rush through a bill of this importance.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the only chance for reading the bill, is it not? It will not be read again.

The SPEAKER. Unless consent is granted the bill must be read in its entirety.

Mr. TILSON. If it is not read in its entirety now, it will not be read at all. It will not be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule as Union Calendar bills are read, so if it is to be read at all it must be read now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If it is not to be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule, when would it be proper to offer an amendment?

Mr. TILSON. When the gentleman from Maryland yields the floor, yields for the purpose of permitting an amendment to be offered, or when the previous question which he will probably demand is refused, will be the only opportunity for amending the bill.

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order until the bill is completely read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for one hour.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. LANGLEY] for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield for the purpose of permitting a Member to offer an amendment unless he desires to yield his right to the floor.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. May I ask whether under the rules it is in order to yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky in order to permit her to speak on her amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, there are two amendments, as I understand it, which the gentleman from Maryland has very kindly consented to have offered. I would like to ask if it would be proper to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky and five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] for the purpose of offering amendments without losing the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland, in charge of the bill, may be permitted to yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. LANGLEY] and five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] for the purpose of offering amendments to the bill without losing the floor.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman include in his request that I be given an opportunity to present two amendments which I have?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not have that in mind. Has the gentleman from Iowa consulted with the chairman of the committee about that?

Mr. LETTS. I have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it agreeable to the chairman?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that the amendments proposed by the gentleman are lengthy. This is a technical subject, with which I am not very familiar, and I can not take the responsibility of saying that those amendments are acceptable to the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to state that so far as I know there is no general opposition to this bill and no disposition to preclude a decision to-day.

Mr. LETTS. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that I would be satisfied with two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky and five minutes to the gentleman from Texas to offer amendments without yielding the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. And five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. LANGLEY].

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mrs. LANGLEY: After the word "chiropractic," page 7, line 6, insert a semicolon and the following: "And (d) a board of examiners in naturopathy."

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, on behalf of this amendment and in explanation of it I would like to state that these naturopathists are a group of medical men and women who are engaged in healing through nature's way. They serve their patients with hot-oil rubs and hot salts and violet rays, and besides this, use fruit and vegetable diets, a very simple treatment. A naturopath studies the basic sciences, anatomy, physiology, chemistry, neurology, pathology, and chiropractic adjustments, comprising a course of three years and nine months each. Generally, an additional clinical course is taken.

I personally have known many who have been helped wonderfully by this treatment. I feel that in justice to them, as they were not present when this bill was prepared, it would be proper to allow them the privilege of having a board of examiners appointed to see if they are proper to operate in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentlewoman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 31, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it correct that all of these amendments, under the unanimous consent just granted, must be offered and voted upon now without any debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, of course, has control of the time for debate.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman wanted to yield time to me on the amendment just adopted.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield at this time 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWMAN], who is the chairman of the subcommittee that reported the legislation, and then have the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] offered afterwards, if that is permissible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is in complete control of the situation.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWMAN], chairman of the subcommittee that reported this proposed legislation.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) it is necessary that we have the historical background of this proposed legislation.

In 1819, by an act of Congress, the Medical Society of the District of Columbia was incorporated. This act was amended by Congress in 1838. In 1870 the Homeopathic Medical Society was incorporated, and in 1893 the Eclectic Medical Society was incorporated. Both of these societies were incorporated by act of Congress. In 1896 the Congress of the United States passed a composite medical bill placing all of these various medical interests and professions under one supervisory board, with three subboards to deal with the special professions regulated by the board.

However, this last-named act failed to include a definition of medicine and surgery, and in a later decision by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia the court restricted the application of that particular act to those prescribing medicine and employing operative surgery.

This decision of the supreme court opened the floodgates to the District of Columbia and permitted every man and woman who did not employ operative surgery and did not prescribe drugs to come into the District of Columbia and practice their own professions of various cults of the healing art. This is the reason that the District of Columbia is fertile ground for diploma mills. There are no laws regulating this appalling condition; and, consequently, unscrupulous drugless healers set up their own institutions and graduate their own members and permit them to practice upon the people in the District of Columbia without legal restraint. The Congress of the United States is responsible for this deplorable condition.

The bill under consideration is in nowise discriminatory. It is most lenient in all its provisions. It offers no objections to any method of the healing art; but it does exact from every practitioner of every art of healing such qualifications as will protect the public from medical quacks and professional charlatans. It defends no cult, nor does it offer any criticism of the various methods of the healing art; but it does demand that all methods of the healing art in the District of Columbia shall be ministered by competent and experienced practitioners. It advocates no one profession. It seeks to bring all the various cults and arts of healing within the jurisdiction of just laws and prevents the practicing of fraud and deception upon more than 500,000 people in the District of Columbia.

This bill is a composite bill. It was introduced in the United States Senate by Senator COPELAND, and a similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by myself. The bill in the Senate passed with a minor amendment, and subsequently it came to the House of Representatives, at the beginning of the second session of the Seventieth Congress, and was referred to the District of Columbia Committee of the House, which committee reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman is proud of his bill, he ought to defend it and not permit such an amendment as was just enacted.

Mr. BOWMAN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that that amendment was due entirely to a misunderstanding. The chairman of the District Committee and myself both interpreted the ruling of the Chair to be that all amendments should be introduced at once before voting on them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It does not help the bill any now.

Mr. BOWMAN. This bill provides a commission on licensure. It is a committee to license candidates for practice of the healing art in the District of Columbia. It provides that that commission shall be composed of the president of the board of commissioners, the United States Commissioner of Education, the United States district attorney of the District of Columbia, the superintendent of public schools, and the health officer of the District of Columbia.

When a party makes application to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia he must make application to this commission on licensure. This commission refers him to the board of examiners in the basic sciences, which board determines the applicant's fitness and qualifications in the basic sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, pathology, and also his qualifications for diagnosing diseases and methods of effecting and perfecting quarantine against contagion. The applicant is then passed for examination and qualification before a board dealing with his particular method of the healing art.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman let me know if the academic qualifications of the men and women are the same as the practicing physician?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes; that is the very object of the bill. It is to require all of those who expect to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to be well versed in the basic sciences.

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman does not answer my question. My question is, When a man completes the study of medicine he has to have certain academic qualifications before the law permits him to practice. Will the same qualifications that are applied to the man or woman that wants to study be applied to the others?

Mr. BOWMAN. They will after 1935.

Mr. SIROVICH. You are going to open the floodgates to them until then?

Mr. BOWMAN. All the floodgates are now open to unscrupulous and incompetent practitioners because of the lack of law.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why not amend the bill so that you will discontinue the practice of these 60-day diploma-mill practitioners? Why give them a status by enacting this bill?

Mr. BOWMAN. If other practitioners can qualify under the bill on the same identical basis of the medical profession, why not let them? You can not say that there is no virtue in chiropractics.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that occupants of the gallery should not manifest their approval or disapproval.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Several boards are provided for in section 8. Will the personnel of those boards be practitioners here?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes. In other words, before anyone can take this examination before the board of chiropractic examiners, which board regulates the rules of that particular profession in the healing art, it will be necessary for him to pass and show his qualifications in the basic sciences just as every physician or doctor is required to do. It is manifestly unfair to the chiropractor, the naturopath, or any other profession of the healing arts to go before a board of medical supervisors and pass an examination on the methods and systems in which they have been trained and schooled.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And what happens between now and 1935 in the District?

Mr. BOWMAN. If this bill passes within 90 days after its passage, every practicing physician, whether he is a medical man, an osteopath, or a chiropractor, or what not, must submit his application to the commission on licensure, and then he must show before the committee of his own profession his qualification for practicing the method which he advocates.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Suppose a chiropractor submits an application, who is to examine him? Will he be examined by chiropractors or by medical doctors?

Mr. BOWMAN. By chiropractors, after he has qualified under the basic sciences.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Is not this examining board to be composed of one chiropractor, one osteopath, one medical man, and one literary man?

Mr. BOWMAN. Is the gentleman talking about the commission on licensure?

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Yes. What will constitute that?

Mr. BOWMAN. That is definitely established by this act. It provides that the president of the board of commissioners, United States Commissioner of Education, United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, the superintendent of schools, and the health officer of the District of Columbia shall compose that board. This bill is practically generous.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman please tell me what medical knowledge the president of the Board of Education has, or the district attorney, or these others he mentions? Would the gentleman like to have doctors appointed to investigate lawyers?

Mr. BOWMAN. If the gentleman had read this bill, he would understand this board has nothing to do with the examination, that this board is simply a supervisory board. It is a board of control, and, consequently, when a party makes application for a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia he is certified to the committee on basic sciences, and upon a proper certificate from the basic science committee the board is then ready to act upon his application provided he successfully passes the tests of the examining board of his own professional methods.

Mr SCHAFER. Who makes appointments to this board that conducts the examination and passes on the qualifications of the different cults?

Mr. BOWMAN. The committee in licensure.

Mr. SCHAFER. There are no medical officers on that committee. Does not the gentleman think that when you select examining boards you should have somebody on the committee that does the selecting who has knowledge of the work that these examining boards are to perform—that is, knowledge of chiropractic or medicine?

Mr. BOWMAN. No; because this committee on licensure has nothing to do with the various methods or professions. It is simply created as a supervisory commission, and, consequently, when an applicant makes application for the right to practice medicine in the District of Columbia, he presents his application to this commission, and the commission, after satisfactory proofs of his qualifications in the basic sciences, refers him to a separate and distinct committee of medical men—I am not talking about the medical profession—for further examination in the profession he wishes to follow.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have a very good chiropractic law in Maryland. Suppose one of our men who is qualified under our law comes down here and asks the privilege of practicing?

Mr. BOWMAN. Reciprocity is provided in the bill.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Inadvertently is there not a contradiction in this bill? In section 2 it is provided that no person shall practice the healing art who is not licensed or exempted by section 42. In section 43 certain exemptions are made. Should you not add section 43 in line 24, on page 3?

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think the gentleman's suggestion is pertinent. However, I shall not object to an amendment of that nature, if a mistake has been made.

Mr. DALLINGER. I do not see how the massage and the Christian Science people who are exempted in section 43 can practice under section 42. It is intended apparently to exempt them, but in section 2 it is provided that no one shall practice unless exempted in section 42, and then under section 43 the massage people and the Christian Scientists are mentioned as being exempted. In order to have the bill consistent, it seems to me in section 2 you ought to add also section 43.

Mr. BOWMAN. Under the circumstances I shall not object to an amendment of that character if there has been a mistake.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would a chiropractor have to qualify in the basic sciences of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, and pathology?

Mr. BOWMAN. Absolutely.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And this will prevent a chiropractor from prescribing medicine and performing operations with an instrument?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is specifically provided?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. I understand the gentleman to say that this committee on licensure is nothing more than a receiving board. What does the language in section 5 mean—

> The commission shall establish minimum standards of preprofessional and professional education in the healing art.

If you give me that power, I can disqualify anyone I see fit, if I make the standards to suit myself.

Mr. BOWMAN. That is very true.

Mr. CROSSER. In the last analysis this is to give them the right to practice their——

Mr. BOWMAN. Possibly that is so, but there ought to be some power in the District of Columbia to prevent and prohibit——

Mr. CROSSER. It is a very dangerous power to give people who have no scientific knowledge.

Mr. IRWIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I will.

Mr. IRWIN. Is it not a fact at the present time in the District of Columbia there is no restriction on people coming in—blacksmiths, plumbers, or anybody else—and practice some cult?

Mr. BOWMAN. There are no restrictions whatever.

Gentlemen, just a few years ago there was a certain school of a recognized cult organized in the District of Columbia which graduated 30 graduates in three days. These doctors are parading themselves in the District of Columbia as doctors, physicians, and surgeons, and when any member of your family is sick or you are sick, you are expected to call in some one who is responsible, some one with experience, some one who can diagnose your symptoms, and tell you what is wrong.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And this is an attempt to regulate that crowd.

Mr. BOWMAN. Absolutely.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I will.

Mr. SCHAFER. Can the gentleman point out the provision in this law whereby these quack doctors can be eliminated?

Mr. BOWMAN. Certainly. Every one of them within 90 days after the passage of this law must make application to this board or commission of licensure in order to be relicensed. They must pass the rigid requirements of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not perfection but it is much better than anything at present in the District of Columbia. It is an absolute necessity for the protection of the people of the District of Columbia and the stranger within our gates. I realize this because I have had a more heart-rending, harrowing experience, probably, than any other Member of this body. A year ago about this time my daughter and little grandchild came here to visit me for one week. The day after her arrival the little girl, who had been apparently well and enjoying good health, was stricken with a convulsion.

The frantic mother rushed to the telephone and called for a doctor. A doctor was summoned by the telephone operator and responded promptly to the call. The child went from one convulsion to another, and I saw the doctor injecting some kind of a drug into that child. I knew that was wrong, though I had no knowledge of medicine or surgery. I immediately made inquiry for the best children's doctor I could get and was referred to a specialist by one of our colleagues in the city of Washington. The doctor first called diagnosed the case as congestion of the bowels. He maintained all that was needed was an enema and a dose of castor oil. The child specialist examined the child eight hours later and declared that she had spinal meningitis. If I had not had friends in Washington to whom I could appeal for advice that little child would no longer be in the land of the living, because 24 hours under wrong treatment she would have died.

That child is worthy of an experiment, if it be an experiment. Those of you who have no more knowledge of medical practice or surgery than I and have criticized or ridiculed this bill tell me, What have you got to offer that is better?

The State of Massachusetts, when I was a member of the legislature 25 years ago, went through this very experience. We had to make concessions at that time. New York had to go through a similar experience. They could not get perfection at once, but in those two States now any one of you can be sure that medical treatment will be afforded by an expert practitioner in his profession and not a man called doctor who has little or no knowledge or experience in medical or surgical science.

Gentlemen, it has been the habit of this House, I am sorry to say, in the last eight years to discredit the Committee on the District of Columbia. We are no better and no worse than all the rest of you; we are doing the best we can for the District, and you ought to help instead of throwing obstacles in our way when we present proposed legislation affecting the health and life of yourself, your family, and your constituents—those you love and those you know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman wants to resist amendments intended to perfect the bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, the amendment might not have been adopted if it had not been for the misunderstanding. I was ready to take the floor. Some of you, if you have friends interested in sun worship, could get them exemption if you had an able, popular, charming, and delightful lady to present the amendment, but if some mere man should present it I doubt if it would have had so nearly unanimous a reception.

Mr. PEERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. Has this bill the indorsement of the Medical Society?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes. It has the indorsement of all the medical societies. It has the indorsement of the finest physicians that it was ever my privilege to meet.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am just wondering if we are not letting too many in. There are 43.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. UNDERHILL. May I have just a few minutes more?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. This bill, as I have tried to explain, is a compromise. All legislation is a species of compromise. We had to compromise in order to get anything.

Mr. ABERNETHY. How many are in?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know. But I do know this: This bill takes care of the future. We have got to stumble along perhaps for a while under the same intolerable conditions that have existed for too long.

Mr. ABERNETHY. We have got one here, called "blood washer." How about that?

Mr. UNDERHILL. This bill is as near perfect as we can get it. I urge you to refuse all amendments that may be offered on the floor, send this bill to the Senate, and let it become a law, because otherwise you postpone again legislation of great moment and make it more difficult to secure necessary protection for the District.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Of course we want to be careful what we do. The bill is not as satisfactory as could be desired, as many medical men here will testify. We have a similar bill in Ohio. This is a bill that constitutes a seed, a nucleus, a germ that will produce and provide for something better hereafter.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I hope you gentlemen will take advice from a professional medical Member.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. This bill is not perfect, but it is as perfect as we can put over.

Mr. SCHAFER. What part of the bill will prevent from practicing such a fake doctor as was mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]?

Mr. UNDERHILL. What have you to offer in place of this?

Mr. SCHAFER. He would be legalized because he had been practicing, and he would be declared qualified as one having passed the examination.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He would not come in under that at all.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent agreement, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] for the purpose of offering an amendment which he desires to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Page 38, line 12, after the letters "dom" and before the colon, insert "or by the clystertory treatment."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the clystertory treatment which this amendment would permit to be practiced in the District of Columbia was originated by a most estimable lady, Mrs. Emma H. Townsend, who lives in Corsicana, Tex., my home city. She has lived there for many years and for more than 25 years has successfully used this method of treatment.

No drugs or medicines of any kind are used; as the word implies, it consists in the main of internal baths. Nothing is done that could be harmful to those who are treated by this method. I understand that thousands of persons have been materially benefited by its use.

The method has been recognized in other States, and Mrs. Townsend has received commendation from eminent medical men in different parts of the United States.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That was the very treatment prescribed by a fake doctor for my granddaughter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield for a question but not for a speech.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I was going to ask the gentleman if that doctor lives in the gentleman's district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The only person in my district who practices this treatment is Mrs. Townsend, and she is a lady of very high standing. There is a lady who lives in the District of Columbia who practices this method, and she learned it from Mrs. Townsend when she lived in Corsicana many years ago.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. That treatment is used by every physician and every family in the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Townsend method is more effective than that of the ordinary treatment of this kind, but if the gentleman is right, then why deny the right to this lady of using it, when she has used it successfully in saving life?

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. The bill does not deny that right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Well, this makes it clear that she has that right. She may have it anyway, but this removes all doubt as to the right to use this means of treatment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman just made the statement that it could not do any harm. Suppose a child was suffering from intussusception and she did what the gentleman says. What does the gentleman think would happen?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not familiar with the medical terms used by the gentleman, but in my judgment the child would die anyway if it had a disease like that. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIROVICH. I think the gentleman ought to know more about these things before he undertakes to testify.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not a medical expert or a physician, and my knowledge of medical terms is limited.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand that the gentleman from Texas has had personal knowledge with reference to the effect of this treatment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have this knowledge as to a member of my household, my little girl, who was sick for quite a while some years ago. Mrs. Townsend gave her this method of treatment and I think she was greatly benefited by it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And what the gentleman has said is based on a rather large practice in the vicinity of the gentleman's home?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes. It has been practiced by Mrs. Townsend for many years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With success?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. How many practitioners does this cover?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I could not inform the gentleman about that.

Mr. BOWMAN. How many does the gentleman think?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not personally acquainted with the practitioners, but I know the originator, Mrs. Townsend, and I know of one party, Miss Davis, who is practicing it in the District of Columbia, but I do not know the others.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. I want to say that Miss Susan L. Davis is a most estimable lady.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. She comes from the gentleman's district in Alabama.

Mr. ALMON. She has restored to health and happiness thousands and thousands of men and women, and I have never heard of a single complaint against her treatment. This amendment ought to be adopted, and I hope my friends will vote for it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS], who desires to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that before the gentleman from Iowa offers his amendment a vote should be had on the amendment just presented.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ZIHLMAN) there were—ayes 40, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LETTS: Page 25, following line 9, strike out lines 10 to 20 and insert the following:

"Any person who was engaged in the practice of chiropractic in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, may deliver to the commission, within 90 days after the approval of this act, a written application for a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia, together with satisfactory proof that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated school or college of chiropractic, and had been actively engaged in the practice of chiropractic for the past 10 years, or had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated school or college of chiropractic recognized by the International Congress of Chiropractic Examining Boards."

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LETTS: On page 28, following line 4, insert the following:

"An applicant who desires to obtain a license to practice chiropractic without examination, by virtue of a license issued to him by a State, Territory, or other jurisdiction forming a part of the United States, who shall submit proof that he has already obtained a license under an examining board recognized by the International Congress of Chiropractic Examining Boards, shall also be entitled thereby to a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Speaker, these amendments are designed to insure a better service to the public on the part of those who practice chiropractic. There are now about 30 States that have legally constituted chiropractic examining boards. They have formed themselves into a voluntary association known as the International College of Chiropractic Examining Boards. The deliberations of this congress are conducted by the duly accredited representatives of the various State boards and the purpose back of the movement is to tighten up this thing so that those who hold themselves out to practice chiropractic shall be qualified by suitable education in some accredited institution.

So the amendments I have offered simply relate to the manner of obtaining licenses here in the District of Columbia based upon service, which is made in this amendment 10 years where there is no diploma and where there is no license from another State, and provides that where a license from some other State or Territory is relied upon, it must come from some State that has an accredited licensing board.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LETTS. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Are not these, substantially, the same rights that are now given to the osteopaths under the bill?

Mr. LETTS. I believe it to be exactly so.

Mr. ANDRESEN rose.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to the floor except by the consent of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS].

Mr. LETTS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Do I understand that if a person has practiced in the District for 10 years, but has no diploma, he will be entitled to practice chiropractic?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; and I think, perhaps, if he can show that he has practiced chiropractic anywhere.

Mr. ANDRESEN. But if he has a diploma and has practiced here for one year, then he may practice under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; but my amendment would require that the diploma must come from some accredited school, some school that is recognized by the International College.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield to listen to this language in the bill?

Mr. LETTS. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL (reading):

Any person who was engaged in the practice of chiropractic in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, may deliver to the commission, within 90 days after the approval of this act, a written application for license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia, together with satisfactory proof that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and had previously obtained a diploma from some legally chartered or incorporated and duly established school or college of chiropractic and was actually engaged in the practice of chiropractic in said District on January 1, 1928.

The gentleman's amendment is in this section word for word.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That refers to the application and not the right to practice. That provides that the application must state that but does not give him the right to practice.

Mr. LETTS. No; that is not the language of my amendment. I think the gentleman will see that I am not injuring the bill. I think I am making it a better bill.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BOWMAN. Does the gentleman understand that the Chiropractic Society of the District of Columbia has approved this bill?

Mr. LETTS. I understand they have approved it. I also have been led to understand that they would be glad to have this further safeguard which I am seeking to put in the bill, which will tend to insure a better and a more intelligent service on the part of those who will hereafter practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were 17 ayes and 19 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, if you analyze the history of medicine from ancient down to modern times, you will invariably find the name of some great doctor who has contributed his genius to the betterment of humanity.

As you call the roll of the benefactors of mankind there in panoramic fashion before you, you will be dazzled by the scientific genius of names that have become immortal through the ages. Where are there names in any line of endeavor that are comparable to Hippocrates, the founder of medicine; to his great disciple, Galen; to the genius of Maimonides; to the brilliant William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood; to that great public benefator, Edward Jenner, who discovered the principle of vaccination; and above all, to William Morton, who gave the benefits of anaesthesia to mankind.

In the hall of fame where men pay their tribute and homage to genius and talent, where are there names that can match in glory, accomplishment, and fame that wizard of the nineteenth century, Pasteur, or the brilliancy of Germany's great biochemist, Ehrlich, or the magnificent contribution of the great English Lord Lister on the principle of sepsis that has saved so many millions of lives throughout the world?

On the heavenly canopy that looks over America, the land of liberty and opportunity, there shines in resplendant glory the genius of four great Americans: Dr. Alexis Carrel, the winner of the Nobel Prize; the brilliancy of Nippon's favorite son, Hideyo Noguchi; Dr. Simon Flexner, the illustrious director of the Rockefeller Institute; and last but not least, the martyred Dr. Louis Goldberger, the distinguished scientist who from the microscope of science forced nature to reveal the secrets and mystery that surrounded the causation of pellagra, and paid the penalty of this triumphal success with his own death. [Applause.]

If this bill that is now before the House permits ignorant, illiterate people to be licensed by the Congress of the United States to practice medicine without any preliminary education or culture or training, the lives of these great scientists will have been spent in vain.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I am in favor of letting anyone practice any cult they may be interested in, provided they have the same qualifications in education and in culture that a regular medical man must possess in every State of the Union in order to practice medicine.

Let these men and women be conversant with every branch of scientific medicine and then after they have obtained their doctor's degree, let them practice any specialty or cult they may be interested in. I contend that there is not a treatment that any disciple of any cult is interested in that can not be found in the armamenterium of modern, scientific medicine.

Through the enactment of this bill you will open the floodgates of the District of Columbia up to the year 1935 to an army of half-baked quacks who will fill the cemeteries of Washington with innocent victims of whom you men who vote for the bill will be the undertakers.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. Not now; a little later. The amendments that have been introduced to this bill that would license all these charletans, pretenders, quacks, and half-baked theorists who are obsessed with the delusion that they can cure all the ills of humanity through enemas, through blood washing, through air, through water, through electricity, through the sun and moon and planets, and the rubbing of oil is a sad and tragic commentary to me and to the intelligence of the membership of this historic forum.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. HOLADAY. Under this bill, it will be possible to appoint 45 different boards for various sects or cults mentioned on page 5 of the report. Can the gentleman give us some information with reference to those various cults?

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman just read them off to me. I just came in from New York and have not had a chance to even read the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. One of them is called blood washers.

Mr. SIROVICH. What else.

Mr. HOLADAY. I can not read them. But I will hand the report to the gentleman.

Mr. SIROVICH. I shall take them as they come along. Since I arrived I have not had time to read the bill. I don't know all of its provisions. First we have here aerotherapy. That apparently appertains to that sect or cult that deals with nature's air. If we take a person suffering with tuberculosis and expose him to nature's sunshine and air that would be aerotherapy. Do we need to license a cult man and have him charge us for that advice? Every medical man besides using medical science utilizes the forces of nature to help sickness of every kind.

Next we come to astral healers. The astral healers are disciples of the ancient sunworshippers of Persia who gazed at the stars, the sun, and the moon and utilized the heat rays and energy of the sun for the benefit of the body. Every scientific doctor utilizes heat of every kind and light of every kind for the benefit of the maimed, the sick, and the crippled.

Then in the fourth group we find biodynamochromatic therapy and hydrotherapy.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. And what is that?

Mr. SIROVICH. Biodynamochromatic therapy apparently means the utilization of the dynamic forms of color to influence sickness in the life of man.

In many hospitals of the country different colors are used to paint the rooms. The contention of the disciples of this cult is that colors play an important part in the life and emotions of human beings.

Hydrotherapy means the utilization of water, hot or cold, in the treatment of every kind of disease.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

I take it that the gentleman is against the bill. The gentleman has referred to quack doctors. As I understand it, this bill will stop those doctors from practicing, because they can not secure licenses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes, but it will legalize a lot of fakers.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Not unless they come within the qualifications of the board.

Mr. SIROVICH. This bill will legalize all these charletans and give them a chance to enter until the bill goes into effect in 1935.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has not read the bill, I think.

Mr. SIROVICH. I stated before that I just arrived from New York and have had no time to familiarize myself completely with all its details.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is familiar with the New York law, is he not?

Mr. SIROVICH. I am. By the way, I notice that among the many cults that will be permitted to practice in the District of Columbia are the Coueists. This distinguished group are followers of the genial Coue of France, who came here a decade ago determined to cure every malady and sickness with which the human body is heir to by repeating nine times "Every day in every way I am getting better and better." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, were I to characterize my impressions of these 45 different cults that are seeking to be licensed to practice and impose upon the intelligence of innocent citizens of the District of Columbia, I could not characterize them any better than by telling a story I would like to narrate to the distinguished membership of this House.

The famous and brilliant Charles Darwin, one of the greatest biologists in the world, once had a group of students who were determined to fool the professor, so they brought to him an insect they had made up, which was composed of the body of a beetle, with the wings of a butterfly, with the legs af a caterpillar, and with the eyes and head of a bee, and they said to him, "Professor, we caught this insect in the woods this morning. Would you please be kind enough to let us know the name of this bug?" Professor Darwin gazed at this unusual insect that was before him, and, after deliberating and meditating for a moment, he said to the spokesman of this group, "Did this bug hum when you caught it?" Whereupon the excited student said "Yes." Thereupon the distinguished Darwin said, "Then it must be a humbug." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I desire to characterize all these cults that are seeking an opportunity to live upon the citizenship of the District of Columbia as nothing else but humbugs.

As a fellow of the American College of Surgeons, as a member of the American Medical Association, as a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, as superintendent of the Peoples Hospital of New York City, and as one who glories in the accomplishments and achievements that medicine and surgery have conferred upon suffering humanity, and in the name of those martyrs of scientific medicine who gave their lives upon the altar of science that mankind might be happier and better for their having lived, I protest against opening the door to men and women who are incapacitated by training, by culture, and by education to practice upon innocent children and unsuspecting citizens of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIROVICH. May I have some additional time?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman he has had 10 minutes, and he has not yet said whether he is for or against the bill.

Mr. SIROVICH. Very well.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a perfecting amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Mr. ZIHLMAN offers a committee amendment: Page 3, line 24, after the word "under," strike out the words "section 42," and insert "section 42 or 43."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I raised objection to the unanimous-consent request for the consideration of Senator COPELAND's bill (S. 3592) in the closing hours of the last session of Congress. The bill now under consideration is almost identical with S. 3592. This bill if enacted will recognize and give standing to improperly trained and diploma-mill practitioners who are now practicing. They will make application for a license which will be given by a board appointed by a commission composed almost entirely of laymen who do not have medical qualifications. The proponents of the bill have stated that members of the medical profession are in favor of its enactment. I read from the Journal of the American Medical Association of March 17, 1928, page 853, an editorial absolutely opposed to Senator COPELAND's bill (S. 3592), which is practically identical with the bill we are now considering. I hope I have sufficient time to read the entire editorial:

A VICIOUS MEDICAL PRACTICE BILL

Osteopathic surgeon generals of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service are a possibility if a bill (S. 3592) introduced in Congress by Senator COPELAND, March 10, becomes a law. The bill provides that "the degrees doctor of medicine and doctor of osteopathy shall be accorded the same rights and privileges under governmental regulations." There is no indication that this mandate is to be limited in its operation to the government of the District of Columbia, although the rest of the bill is so limited. If the bill is enacted, it may be, and no doubt will be, construed to put osteopaths on the same basis as doctors of medicine throughout the entire Federal Government service.

Both Senator COPELAND's present bill and the earlier bill introduced by him at the instance of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia (S. 3107) are fundamentally unsound. They undertake to authorize and regulate matters that they do not accurately define. Both bills recognize the practice of osteopathy as something distinct from the practice of medicine and from the practice of drugless healing, but neither gives indication as to what the distinctions are. If the proponents of this legislation do not know the distinctions or fail to state them, how are law enforcement officers and the courts to find out what Congress intends by such legislation?

The recent Copeland bill undertakes not only to regulate the practice of a cult which is undefined even by its own devotees, but also to authorize and regulate the practice of an innumerable category of other cults, so-called drugless healers, who, under this bill, obviously need not be drugless at all. "Drugless healing," according to the bill, is "any system of healing that teaches that disease may be prevented, relieved, or cured without the use of drugs, medicine, or operative surgery." Any five or more adherents of any so-called drugless method of healing may, as a matter of right, demand that an official, permanent board of examiners be appointed, if this bill becomes a law, to represent and give dignity to each and every system of "drugless healing" they elect to cover by a petition. The only limitation on the official recognition of any such system is that the petitioners must differentiate it from the unrestricted practice of the healing art; it may include surgery and the use of any and all drugs, if its proponents can find any one element of unrestricted practice that they are willing to forego.

All of the elaborate provisions of Senator COPELAND's bill for the protection of the public against fraud and ignorance in the treatment of disease are thrown to the four winds when it comes to the diagnosis of disease and its treatment by prayer or spiritual means, or by hygienic, dietetic, or domestic remedies. Any person is at liberty to engage in the business of treating disease by any or all of these agencies. He need not submit evidence to anyone as to age or moral character. He need not have affiliation with any organized religious body. He is not called on for evidence of professional or spiritual ability. He is not asked to tell how, in order to adapt his curative treatment to the needs of his patients, he diagnoses the diseases from which they suffer. He asks leave or license from no one, he registers nowhere; he simply opens an office or hires a hall, advertises his business by signs or otherwise, and proceeds to collect from the gullible public whatever he can for his services.

Limitations of space prevent a discussion of other glaring defects in the pending legislation, such as those relating to the licensing of osteopaths to use drugs and to practice surgery, to the issue of licenses by reciprocity, and to the refusal, suspension, and revocation of licenses. What has been said, however, is probably sufficient to show the undesirability of the enactment of any such legislation. The District of Columbia is the seat of the National Capital, but its people have no voice in Congress to influence legislation there. Its legislators are elected by the people of the United States outside of the District of Columbia, and are responsible and responsive to those who elect them. All of this has been forcibly pointed out by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia in its recent appeals to the State associations for the support of its legislative program. All of it applies with equal force now, when the medical profession of the entire country should unite in an appeal to Congress to dissuade it from the enactment of any of the bills that are now pending to regulate the practice of the healing art, of osteopathy, of chiropractic, or of naturopathy in the District of Columbia.

The problem of the District of Columbia is the problem of the entire United States. Legislation by Congress is inevitably reflected in legislation in the individual States. Physicians are protecting their own people when they urge their representatives in Congress to defeat such vicious legislation.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BOWMAN. What is the situation now?

Mr. SCHAFER. If you want satisfactory legislation, do not pass a bill which will put the graduates of schools with a 60-day course, diploma mill, and other unqualified fakers in the same category with those who have devoted years in preparation and study in reputable institutions of learning. If this bill is enacted, the unqualified and fakers now practicing will automatically be given a license. There are a great many osteopaths and chiropractors who have had considerable training and knowledge of medicine, who are opposed to this bill because it will raise fakers to their own high standard.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the entire editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the evils complained of by the gentleman from Wisconsin prevail here now, with all these alleged professors of the healing art and healing cults practicing here without any regulation whatever.

The committee has been called upon to pass several bills governing each branch of the so-called healing art, and the bill before us is the best bill we could get under the circumstances, and covers the general subject of regulation of all branches of medicine and the healing art.

The Medical Society of the District of Columbia, composed of reputable physicians, have approved this legislation, not because it is all that they want but because it is the best they could get under the circumstances.

This bill is sponsored by the senior Senator from New York and it is a step in the right direction.

The situation here is such that regulation is imperatively needed, and the committee feels that it should be enacted at this session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—FLOOD CONTROL (H. DOC. NO. 573)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Flood Control and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith for the information of the Congress communications from the Secretary of Agriculture dated June 4, 1928, and February 9, 1929, submitting reports with reference to the relation of forestry to the control of floods in the Mississippi Valley. These reports have been prepared in compliance with the provision contained in section 10 of the act of Congress approved May 15, 1928, for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1929.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to authorize the exchange of certain public lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1271) entitled "An act to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15712) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. WARREN, Mr. JONES, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 12032. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended;

H. R. 13097. An act for the relief of Thomas W. Moore; and

H. R. 14479. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Mayesville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 4560. An act authorizing Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between a point at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., and a point at or near Alburgh, Vt.;

S. 5301. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, Tenn.; and

S. 5377. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SIROVICH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 67.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 12, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, February 12, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, February 11, 1929)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3771) vacating the alley between lots 16 and 17, square 1083, District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1281) to amend section 7 (a) of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), as amended by section 2 of the act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 812), so as to provide operators' permits free of cost to enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard operating Government-owned vehicles in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4441) to amend the laws relating to assessment and collection of taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15386) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 to the bill, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5758. An act amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 6664. An act to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12739. An act to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 13752. An act to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium; and

H. R. 16274. An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 4560. An act authorizing Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between a point at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., and a point at or near Alburgh, Vt.:

S. 5301. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, Tenn.; and

S. 5377. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River.

CANALIZING OF OHIO RIVER

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment House Concurrent Resolution 51, and I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to it.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

The concurrent resolution was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Whereas the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., represents an achievement of great importance in the development of the inland waterways of the United States; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has by legislation contributed to the realization of this project; and

Whereas a celebration commemorating the accomplishment of this great improvement is to be held October 15 to 20, 1929, at which officials of the United States and of the States adjoining the Ohio River will attend; and

Whereas it is fitting that the Congress of the United States be represented at such celebration: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee consisting of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., to be held October 15 to 20, 1929. The members of such committee shall be paid their actual expenses, one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, 120 years ago to-day Abraham Lincoln was born in a log cabin 3 miles south of the present site of Hodgenville, Ky. On a rude and rough couch, sheltered by a primitive cabin with dirt floor, one small door and a still smaller window, Nancy Lincoln, a wilderness mother, gave birth to an American savior.

I have no doubt the angels sang as they sang eighteen hundred and more years before under the stars of Bethlehem. But no one heard the angels in that solitude of Kentucky where Lincoln was born.

It is striking strange that in that same year, 1809, many great characters now in the world's hall of fame were born. Darwin, the naturalist and investigator; Poe, the tragic poet; Mendelssohn, the master of music; Tennyson, England's poet laureate; Gladstone, the British Premier and statesman; Holmes, the essayist and philosopher, were all born in that same eventful year.

It may be mere chance, it may be a part of the Divine plan, that five of our Presidents were born in log cabins—Lincoln, William Henry Harrison, Jackson, Fillmore, and Garfield. God emphasizes the profound truth that real greatness is born in humility and nurtured in solitude.

Artists have invoked their genius and imagination in painting the Nativity in the galleries of the world, imperishable works of art. The nativity of Lincoln is chiseled in the memories and hearts of a grateful people. We have dedicated many monuments, temples, and shrines to Lincoln, but such works of man have no sympathy, no voices. The only imperishable shrine to our matchless President is the picture of his nativity in the soul of the nation he saved.

The nativity of the Christ was in humble Bethlehem. The nativity of Abraham Lincoln was in the wilderness of Kentucky, which Boone called "dark and bloody ground."

Jefferson was just closing his second term as President. Napoleon had recently sold Louisiana to the United States, adding rich domains which the child of Kentucky later saved to the Union.

Seven months before Lincoln was born a child named Jefferson Davis came into the world in a cabin less than a hundred miles from the spot made historic by the nativity of Lincoln. A strange coincidence. The secrets of the Almighty, concealed in those two humble events, were not revealed to the world for half a century or more.

Was it a part of God's purposes or blind chance that the careers of these two men, so long divergent, should come together in a mighty struggle? Davis moved to the Southland and slavery; Lincoln found an abode in Illinois and freedom.

The first Lincoln Highway began in this modest cabin abode in Kentucky. It ran across Indiana to Illinois. It continued on to Chicago, the metropolis of the Middle West, thence to the Capital of the Nation, back to Springfield, Ill., its terminus.

On that highway trod a marked man, tall and gaunt, with a sad yet a strong face, a face radiant with the inspiration of a great soul. Like a soldier of the cross, impelled by a force he could not resist, he walked to his doom, and finally was carried over the last few miles of a highway wet with a nation's tears to the peace he longed for.

The Lincoln birthplace cabin, like him who was born there, has had a strange and almost sad history. In the early sixties, shortly after Lincoln's first election as President, it was purchased and moved a mile and a half away from its original location, where it remained until 1894, when it again changed hands and was moved back to its original site on the Lincoln farm.

It was taken down and shipped to the Nashville Centennial. Later it was exhibited in Central Park, New York; then at the Buffalo Exposition in 1901. In 1906 it was purchased by the Lincoln Farm Association and sent to Louisville, Ky., for exhibition. It remained there until 1909 when President Roosevelt laid the corner stone of the present Memorial Building, when it was placed therein upon completion and dedication of the memorial by President Taft November 9, 1911. The Lincoln Farm Association property comprised a tract of land of 110½ acres, about 2 miles south of Hodgenville, Ky.

April 12, 1916, Congress accepted a deed of gift or conveyance from the association to the United States of America of the land, the homestead, and the log cabin, together with an endowment fund of $50,000. The gift was on condition that the land and buildings thereon shall be forever dedicated to the purpose of a national park or reservation, the United States agreeing to protect and preserve it.

Private citizens and a private organization saved the homestead and cabin of Lincoln from exploitation and dedicated them for public purposes. The United States has pledged itself to protect and preserve them. This pledge should be kept.

Of all the shrines erected to the memory of the martyred Lincoln, this birthplace is the choicest of all. It marks the greatest miracle of the Republic. It is a symbol of the hopes of every boy struggling to attain an honorable career. It is a Mecca where the children of the Republic may gather and take courage from the story of a man, reading from a few books in a rude cabin by the light of a fire of pine knots, who became the leading actor in the greatest drama of America, if not of all history.

Little new can be told of Lincoln's public career, yet much more can be said of the place of his nativity, now happily made a shrine under the care of the Government. No monument, no temple, not even the glorious memorial in Washington, can convey to this and future generations a more eloquent tribute to the majesty of Abraham Lincoln than the humble cabin in which he was born.

The log cabin and the Washington memorial are striking proofs of the possibilities of a great soul traveling under Divine inspiration and guidance. The babe in the wilderness is now the immortal figure in the stately edifice on the banks of the Potomac. Behold, the cabin and the memorial are sacred shrines!

The birthplace of Lincoln is dedicated to peace; yet Lincoln was not for peace at any price. He was ready to fight for human freedom and a united Nation. He was not a pacifist and would not be a pacifist if alive to-day. National honor and national defense were the keynotes of his whole life.

Even now in the picture of the rescued log cabin and grounds and edifice we can see armed hosts gathering and hear Lincoln's appeal:

> We are not enemies, but friends.

We can read again in letters of gold his message:

> My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union.

And after the war from his second inaugural address:

> With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

If Lincoln was prepared to fight to save the Nation and to sacrifice blood and treasure to that end, how much more willing should we of this generation be to defend and preserve the Nation he saved. The name of Lincoln is a synonym for nationalism and national defense.

Finally, the reliance of Lincoln upon Divine Providence, as taught him in the humble cabin, should teach us that only as we rely on the unseen forces of the universe, and harmonize our public activities with the Divine plan, can we hope to attain success in solving the many new and serious problems before us.

The Psalmist said:

> I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help.

Lincoln lifted his eyes unto the hills and gathered strength and wisdom. He believed in the spiritual forces of the universe.

No one can ignore these tremendously powerful forces we call spiritual. They are not found in treatises on politics or political economy, or in the statistics of trade and commerce; yet they are present and constitute an important factor in the modern problem of government and human welfare. Like all the silent forces of nature, they are the most powerful.

After the lapse of 120 years, we feel with profound solemnity and mighty power, the spiritual influence that flows from the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln.

God gave us Lincoln.

Let us not fail to give Him thanks for that gift.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether there is any reason to hope that the democratic spirit of Mr. Lincoln, and his ideas about equal justice to all men, will enter into the composition of the tariff that the Senator from Utah is now so active in helping to frame?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I sincerely hope so.

THE BOSTON POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I desire to have read by the clerk, if there is no objection, a communication from Mr. William C. Deming, president of the United States Civil Service Commission, with respect to the Gow postmastership case, which was the subject of some observations by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] a few days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE BOSTON POSTMASTERSHIP

By William C. Deming, president United States Civil Service Commission

So much has been printed during the past few weeks regarding the examination for the Boston postmastership in a fragmentary way that must result in misunderstanding, that the Civil Service Commission feels that it is due the citizens of Boston, as well as the commission itself, that a clear explanation of the situation be made. New England had much to do with the passage of the civil service law of 1883, and its present supporters of the merit system are legion.

NOT IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE

First, it should be understood that postmastership at first, second, and third class offices are not classified under the civil service law. The law governing provides a 4-year term for postmasters at offices of these classes and that appointment shall be made through nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. By Executive order, the Civil Service Commission is required to hold an open competitive examination for postmaster when requested by the Postmaster General to do so. The commission has no control over vacancies and it is not the business of the commission to reason why when it is asked by the Post Office Department to announce an examination.

The Executive order requires the commission to certify to the Postmaster General the names of the highest three eligibles resulting from the competition. Any one of these three may be selected for nomination. When the commission certifies the eligibles to the department its duty ends under the terms of the Executive order.

Obviously it is not practicable or desirable to judge the qualifications of applicants for an important administrative job, such as the postmastership at Boston, through a written question-and-answer test in an examination room. Years of experience in conducting postmaster examinations has justified the commission's plan of testing applicants for postmasterships through careful consideration of their business training and experience, their achievement, their educational background, and their character, as determined by the most searching personal inquiry.

UNUSUAL CARE EXERCISED

Knowing from newspaper reports before the examination was announced that the selection of the Boston postmaster would be a matter of unusual interest, the commission made plans to have the investigation made in Boston with even more than the care and thoroughness usually exercised in such cases. It selected as its own representative Mr. J. H. Weiss for two reasons: First, because he is one of the best investigators on the commission's staff; and, secondly, because Mr. Weiss never had been in Boston and knew nothing about the conditions of the Boston postmastership. He could conduct the investigation with an open mind.

The Post Office Department gave the commission its choice of its inspectors to collaborate in the investigation. Post Office Inspector John W. Johnson was decided upon because of his known ability and fairness as an investigator.

Mr. Weiss and Mr. Johnson were in absolute accord as to the best qualified three men among the 13 applicants for the postmastership at Boston. They were also in perfect agreement as to their relative qualifications, placing Charles R. Gow first, Roland M. Baker second, and Herman Hormel third.

The men who make the investigation, however, do not rate the applicants. They simply gather the evidence by taking the testimony of representative business and professional men and women of the community. Mr. Weiss and Mr. Johnson spent two weeks on the work in Boston.

RATINGS ASSIGNED

The rating of the applicants for the Boston postmastership was made by five expert examiners in the office of the commission. All of these, and afterwards the chief of the examining division and the chief examiner, and finally the commission itself, agreed without question that Gow, Baker, and Hormel were the best qualified three among the 13 applicants and should be rated in the order named.

Colonel Gow stood out among the applicants with the prominence of a straw hat in December. His business experience and educational qualifications were exceptional. Further, in the two weeks' investigation, not a single criticism was made regarding his business ability, educational qualifications, or character. He outranked Mr. Baker because of his superior early educational advantages and of his broader business and civic experience. The customary addition of five points for military service was included in his rating.

Mr. Baker suffered somewhat from disturbed conditions in the Boston post office, which had caused the Post Office Department to reduce the efficiency standing of the office during Mr. Baker's incumbency from good to fair. The report of the investigation of Mr. Weiss and Mr. Johnson comprises hundreds of pages of testimony, a large part of it having to do with Mr. Baker's administration of the office. Nevertheless, the commission gave Mr. Baker the benefit of every doubt and rated him higher than it did eight years ago, by giving him credit for his additional experience. The resulting ratings were: Gow, 89.20; Baker, 82.20; and Hormel, 72.

SENATOR WALSH'S COMMENT

The newspapers have reported the debate in the Senate attending the confirmation of Colonel Gow's nomination. Senator DAVID I. WALSH, familiar with all the circumstances, criticized, not the Civil Service Commission, but the anomalous conditions which permit political manipulation of postmaster appointments in spite of the requirement of open competitive examinations. Senator WALSH said: "I am not criticizing the Civil Service Commission. I am objecting to the absence of real civil-service methods. We now have only the name without the substance of civil service * * *. I am not challenging the examination."

The Civil Service Commission announces postmaster examinations, and all other examinations, in good faith and conducts them impartially. It has no interest whatever in any individual or in the politics of any individual. It is interested only in the qualifications of the applicants. It is in no way responsible for advance statements that a certain person has been selected for a postmastership. It can not prevent such statements. It can merely perform to the best of its ability the part assigned to it in the selection of postmasters under the Executive order. Regardless of the wishes of any politician or political party no one can be appointed as a result of examination unless he is among the three certified as eligible.

Since 1883 the Civil Service Commission has examined millions of applicants. If there were any "hocus-pocus" in its work, the Civil Service Commission would not have lasted six months. It has lived 46 years and its responsibilities are regularly increased by both Congress and the Presidents.

Mr. GILLETT subsequently said: Mr. President, I knew nothing of the letter that has just been read to the Senate about the Boston post office until I heard it read to-day; but it gives me an opportunity as a matter of justice, I think, to make a correction of what I said the other day when that subject was before the Senate which otherwise I probably would not have done.

Complaint has been made to me from home that I was not fair to the acting postmaster at Boston in one or two particulars. I stated that he had registered as a Republican two years ago. I find that I was mistaken, and that it was four years ago that he became a Republican. Moreover, complaint was made that I charged that he had used the post office as a political engine. That is denied. I know nothing of it personally, and very likely he himself was not responsible in that way. It is natural, inasmuch as Boston is an overwhelmingly Democratic city, that the main part of the subordinate officials in that post office should be Democrats; and there is a strong feeling, at any rate, among the Republicans in Boston that the office has been used as a headquarters for Democratic activities.

Now I want to say just one word as to the effect of this letter. It seems to me that, while undoubtedly there is to-day much to be complained of in the conduct of the civil service, and neither this administration nor any administration can always live up strictly to the theory of the civil service, yet this very case demonstrates the great advance that has been made; for before the civil service law was in effect Mr. Baker, who was appointed by President Wilson, would five years ago have been summarily turned out of office, and a Republican would have been appointed in his place. Instead, he was permitted to continue for five years more; and now no favorite of the Republican organization is selected to take his place, but under this administration a man is selected who, as this letter shows, by fair and impartial examination, was proved to stand higher in executive ability and efficiency than Mr. Baker; and although there was another active Republican politician who was the third on the list, and might have been chosen, yet the administration chose the man who stood at the head of the list—something that certainly would not have happened before the civil service law was passed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the secretary of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of useless papers on the files of the commission in Washington not needed in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. DALE and Mr. MCKELLAR members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the State Senate of Massachusetts, requesting Congress to take action for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as the prohibition amendment, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented on the 9th instant by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, page 3115 of the RECORD.)

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Columbiana County, Ohio, praying that action be deferred in the matter of the enactment of the cruiser construction bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States that it is the sense of the members of the Minnesota Legislature that an adequate agricultural tariff be enacted at the earliest possible date

Whereas the prices of agricultural commodities are not on a parity with prices of other products and especially with the prices of those commodities which farmers must buy; and

Whereas there are competitive agricultural products imported that represent the product of 1,000,000 American farms; and

Whereas these importations are directly depressing the prices of farm crops: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That we favor the readjustment of tariff schedules affecting agricultural commodities so that the American farmer will be placed on a parity with those engaged in other industries and which will insure for him the full benefit of the American market for his products and will give him the average cost of production based on American standards of living; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge action on this matter in the present session of Congress or in a special session to be called for the consideration of emergency agricultural tariff and general agricultural relief legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, President-elect Herbert Hoover, the Speaker of the House, the Vice President of the United States, to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and to each Member in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. SMOOT presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1 (by Mr. Welling), memorializing Congress to enact legislation to prevent discrimination against American farmers in the production of sugar beets and to provide an adequate tariff on sugar

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the governor concurring therein):

Whereas by reason of the enormous increase in the production of sugar throughout the world, the price of domestic beet sugar has been forced down to an unreasonably low basis and to a point where the farmer's interests in the industry is in serious jeopardy; and

Whereas the growing of sugar beets is one of the most valuable assets the farmers of Utah have had, not only in a financial sense but as a factor in keeping up the fertility of the soil by crop rotation; and

Whereas the by-product of the sugar beet enters very largely into the farm economy of all our beet-growing districts as a material aid to the dairy and livestock business; and

Whereas the loss of these various beneficial results would be exceedingly harmful to every phase of the agricultural life of Utah; and

Whereas the general business interests of the State are greatly benefited by the annual proceeds from the sugar-beet crop, and any detriment to the industry will be felt by every business interest of the State of Utah; and

Whereas a large amount of sugar is coming into this country from the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Cuba, where the cost of living is very much lower than in the United States; and

Whereas this sugar from the Philippines, Hawaii, and Porto Rico comes in free of duty and that from Cuba under a preferential rate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the serious situation of the beet-sugar industry be brought to the attention of the Congress of the United States, so that the American market may be safeguarded by an adequate tariff on sugar, for the American farmer.

This act shall take effect upon approval.

Mr. SMOOT also presented the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 2 (by Mr. Ryan), memorializing Congress to pass and the President to approve at this session H. R. 14665, by Mr. COLTON, as amended

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the governor concurring therein):

Whereas there is now pending before the Seventieth Congress, second session, H. R. 14665, by Mr. COLTON, as amended, entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the purpose of said H. R. 14665, as amended, is to authorize the appropriation, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations:

The sum of $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929;

The sum of $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930;

The sum of $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931; and

Whereas, the State of Utah is one of the public-land States to which the passage of the above bill would be only simple justice on the part of the Federal Government, as that parent Government is the actual owner of about 72 per cent of the total area of this State; and

Whereas study of the progress of road construction in the public-land States develops the absolute necessity of the above appropriations, these studies showing that under present appropriations the Federal-aid system should be completed in less than 10 years, while it will require approximately 40 years to complete the forest-highway system; and

Whereas the purpose of said legislation is more quickly to aid in closing important gaps in the main system of highways within and across the State of Utah, largely across public domain and Government reserves, and thus to aid in the early completion of an adequate system of highways interstate in character: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah, the governor concurring, hereby recommends the prompt passage of H. R. 14665, by Mr. COLTON, as amended, at this session of Congress, in order that the construction of roads as therein provided may be undertaken at once and their completion expedited.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolution of Federal appropriation for survey, improvement, construction, and maintenance of a road on the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservation in the State of Nebraska

PREAMBLE

Whereas section 318a, chapter 8, title 25, United States Code (compact edition), provides as follows:

"Appropriations are hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for material, equipment, supervision, and engineering, and the employment of Indian labor in the survey, improvement, construction, and maintenance of Indian reservation roads not eligible to Government aid under chapter 1 of title 23 and for which no other appropriation is available, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior"; and

Whereas the construction of a road beginning at a point near the village of Decatur, Burt County, Nebr., thence running in a northwesterly direction to Macy, Thurston County, Nebr.; thence to the Winnebago Agency; and thence to the village of Winnebago, Thurston County, Nebr., is necessary for convenient transportation to, from, and through northeastern Nebraska; and

Whereas the proposed road above described is situated entirely within the limits of the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation of Nebraska and is not such an Indian reservation road as to be eligible to Government aid under chapter 1, title 23, United States Code (compact edition), and for that reason an appropriation of money from the United States Treasury is not available, save and except under the provisions of section 318a, chapter 8, title 25, United States Code (compact edition), as aforesaid: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska:

First. That it is the sense of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska that an appropriation be, as soon as can conveniently be done, authorized out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for material, equipment, supervision, and engineering; for the survey, improvement, construction, and maintenance of a road beginning at a point near Decatur, Burt County, Nebr.; thence running in a northwesterly direction to Macy, Thurston County, Nebr.; thence to the Winnebago Agency; and thence to the village of Winnebago, Thurston County, Nebr.; all of which road above described is situated entirely within the limits of the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation in the State of Nebraska.

Second. That the chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, be, and hereby is, directed forthwith to transmit copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, to the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the United States and to the several Members of said bodies representing the State of Nebraska therein and to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States.

C. G. CAMPBELL,
C. A. VALDER.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, FORTY-FIFTH SESSION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Lincoln, Nebr., February 8, 1929.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by unanimous vote of the house of representatives of this State.

FRANK P. CARRICK,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. NORRIS also presented the following resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

REUNION OF BLUE AND GRAY

Resolution and memorial petitioning the Congress of the United States to enact into law House bill 14461, Seventieth Congress, second session, which provides for a joint reunion of the surviving veterans of the war of 1861 to 1865, to be held in the city of Washington in the year 1929, and to authorize the appropriation of sufficient money from the United States Treasury to pay the expenses of such joint reunion, and to provide for a commission to carry into effect the provisions of said act

PREAMBLE

Whereas Mr. L. D. Richards, of Fremont, Nebr., who was a soldier of the Union for four years during the Civil War, and other survivors of that war in Nebraska have long had in contemplation that there should be a final reunion of the veterans of that great war in the city of Washington; and

Whereas such a reunion of the "Blue and Gray" would accomplish the result of wiping out the last remaining trace of bitterness, if any shall remain, between the sections of our country once at war, but now happily united; and

Whereas House bill 14461, now pending before the Seventieth Congress, second session, of the United States in Washington, will make, if enacted into law, such joint reunion possible; and

Whereas the passage of said bill through our National Congress will make the hope and prayer of every veteran of the Civil War come true that such joint reunion be held and accomplished while he shall still be upon the earth to witness it with his own eyes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska:

First. That we urge the Congress of the United States forthwith to enact House bill 14461 into law.

Second. That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, to the Senate and to the House of Representatives of the United States and to the several Members of said bodies representing the State of Nebraska therein, and to the President of the United States.

FAILURES OF JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have a communication from a banker at Casper, Wyo., whom I do not know, accompanied by an advertisement appearing in the Wall Street Journal giving information of the failure of seven Federal joint-stock land banks in the Middle West. The information was startling in character to me. I ask that the letter, with the advertisement, may be incorporated in the RECORD, and then referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the letter and the advertisement will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WYOMING TRUST CO. OF CASPER,
Casper, Wyo., February 6, 1929.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WALSH: We inclose herewith page 15 of the Wall Street Journal of January 30, 1929. It contains a notice to all bondholders of the Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank to send in their claims to the receiver.

Possibly you are familiar with this whole matter. However, we can not refrain from respectfully calling it to your attention. The collapse of a number of joint-stock land banks over the country has been so disastrous to investors that we certainly should have a valiant champion to plead our cause.

The joint-stock land banks are a part of the Government rural-credit structure. Morally, if not legally, the Government is primarily responsible both for the inception and the successful management of these institutions. The Government itself first announced the bonds of the joint-stock land banks to the public. The Government has made these issues eligible for the security of funds of the Postal Savings Bank in its elected depositories. Following the lead of the Government, many of the States have made these bonds eligible to secure public deposits.

We feel that the general investing public has been grossly deceived in the Government's attitude in this matter. This bank has suffered a considerable loss thereby. Either the Government should make good the delinquency of its "foster child" or at least conduct an investigation that would hunt out and properly punish the parties guilty of such gross incompetence, graft, and downright dishonesty.

We have no license or right to address you in this matter and certainly have hesitated to do so. Our only excuse is that we are well assured of your clean-cut and definite policy of searching out shady matters of this kind.

Respectfully yours,

R. C. CATHER, Vice President.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Wednesday morning, January 30, 1929]

Notice to bondholders and all others having claims against the Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Salina, Kans.; Bankers' Joint Stock Land Bank, of Boonville, Mo.; Liberty Central Joint Stock Land Bank, of St. Louis, Mo.; Missouri Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; and Wichita Joint Stock Land Bank, of Wichita, Kans.

Whereas, on the 4th day of May, 1927, by order of the Federal Farm Loan Board, under and in pursuance of the provisions of section 29 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, the Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo., was declared insolvent and placed in the hands of a receiver appointed therefor by the Federal Farm Loan Board; and

Whereas H. M. Langworthy is now duly qualified and acting as such receiver; and

Whereas the corporate name and title of the Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Salina, Kans., was by authority of an order of the Federal Farm Loan Board dated March 14, 1922, changed to the corporate name and title of Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; and the corporate name and title of the Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo., was, by authority of an order of the Federal Farm Loan Board dated May 18, 1922, changed to the corporate name and title of Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; and

Whereas prior to May 4, 1927, under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, the Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo., acquired the assets and assumed the liabilities of the Bankers' Joint Stock Land Bank, of Boonville, Mo.; the Liberty Central Joint Stock Land Bank, of St. Louis, Mo.; the Missouri Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; and the Wichita Joint Stock Land Bank, of Wichita, Kans.; and

Whereas the receiver has been authorized and instructed by the Federal Farm Loan Board to give all bondholders and other creditors notice to file their claims as hereinafter set forth:

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that all persons having claims against said Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.; Liberty Joint Stock Land Bank, of Salina, Kans.; Bankers' Joint Stock Land Bank, of Boonville, Mo.; Liberty Central Joint Stock Land Bank, of St. Louis, Mo.; Missouri Joint Stock Land Bank of Kansas City, Mo.; and the Wichita Joint Stock Land Bank, of Wichita, Kans., including all owners of bonds issued by said banks, shall present their claims thereon to H. M. Langworthy, receiver of Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo. All claims, including those of bondholders, to share in the general assets of the bank must be filed with the receiver on or before the 31st day of May, 1929, or they may be disallowed.

Bondholders in proving their claims must deliver their bonds to the receiver. Forms for the delivery of bonds and proof of claims may be obtained from the receiver. In requesting forms, the bondholders should state whether he holds registered bonds or coupon bonds, or both.

Dated December 1, 1928.

H. M. LANGWORTHY,
Receiver Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, Mo.

(Address H. M. Langworthy, receiver Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank, Land Bank Building, Kansas City, Mo.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3981) for the relief of Lieut. Robert O'Hagan, Supply Corps, United States Navy (Rept. No. 1716);

A bill (H. R. 12502) for the relief of John H. and Avie D. Mathison, parents of Charles W. Mathison, deceased (Rept. No. 1717);

A bill (H. R. 13658) for the relief of Hugh Anthony McGuigan (Rept. No. 1718); and

A bill (H. R. 13721) for the relief of Edwin I. Chatcuff (Rept. No. 1719).

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5581) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street adjacent to Nogales, Ariz.," approved May 16, 1928, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1720) thereon.

Mr. GERRY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9009) for the relief of Francis Leo Shea, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1721) thereon.

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2986) for the relief of Francis J. McDonald, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1722) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5091) for the relief of Edward C. Dunlap, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1723) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on this calendar day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 4560. An act authorizing Elisha N. Goodsell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between a point at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., and a point at or near Alburgh, Vt.;

S. 5301. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9 in Cocke County, Tenn.; and

S. 5377. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Monongahela River.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAINE (for Mr. LA FOLLETTE):

A bill (S. 5780) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Comfort; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 5781) to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered damages from deaths, personal injuries, or property loss due to an airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., July 10, 1921 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 5783) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TYDINGS (for Mr. HAWES):

A bill (S. 5784) granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Taylor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 5785) to establish a board of civil service appeals and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service," approved March 4, 1923 (ch. 265, 42 Stat. 1488), and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 5786) regarding hours of labor of certain watchmen, building guards, firemen, and engineers in the custodial service; to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. HEFLIN. I introduce a bill which was introduced once before by my former colleague, Senator Underwood. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be so referred.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

A bill (S. 5787) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 5788) granting a pension to Mary C. Von Ezdorf; to the Committee on Pensions.

WORLD WAR VETERANS' INSURANCE

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on May 29, 1928, an act was approved fixing a period of limitation within which a veteran of the World War might institute a suit involving a controversy between himself and the Veterans' Bureau arising from an insurance contract or other written contract. That act provided a twofold period, one being that the cause should be instituted within six years after it arose, and the other within one year after the act was approved, whichever was the later date; so that the 1-year period will expire on May 29 of this year.

I introduce a bill, Mr. President, designed to extend the 1-year period thus fixed to May 29, 1930. That is the only change proposed to be made in the law. I call attention to that because I may offer the bill as an amendment to some other bill later in the session. I think it will give rise to no controversy when it is tendered, and will correct what may be an obvious injustice to worthy ex-service men having just cause for litigation with the bureau.

The bill (S. 5782) to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I submit a proposed amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to the resolution (S. Res. 322) submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I ask that it be printed and also printed in the RECORD and that it lie on the table.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hereafter all business in the Senate shall be transacted in open session, unless the Senate in open session by a majority vote shall determine that a particular nomination, treaty, or other matter, shall be considered in closed executive session, in which case all subsequent proceedings with respect to said nomination, treaty, or other matter shall be kept secret.

Provided, That the injunction of secrecy as to the whole or any part of proceedings in closed executive session may be removed on motion adopted by a majority vote of the Senate in closed executive session.

Anything in the rules of the Senate inconsistent with the foregoing is hereby repealed.

FREE TEXTBOOKS FOR DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL PUPILS

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that the amendments I offered on yesterday to the bill (S. 3902) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia, may be submitted as intended to be proposed by me to House bill 12739, providing free textbooks in the District of Columbia schools, and so forth, and that the amendments be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, that committee having considered and reported the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be so referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 5758. An act amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 6664. An act to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12739. An act to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 13752. An act to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium; and

H. R. 16274. An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia.

RESERVE BANK RATES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 327) was read, as follows:

Resolved, (a) That the Federal Reserve Board be respectfully requested to report to the Senate as early as possible any information it may possess concerning any agreements or understandings, if any, made by any Federal reserve bank or any officer of any Federal reserve bank or the Federal Reserve Board, with the Bank of England, Bank of France, or any other foreign bank or foreign acceptance corporation relative to the raising or lowering of the Federal reserve bank rates since January 1, 1924, and report to the Senate the ostensible or admitted reasons given, if any, for such agreements or understandings.

(b) If such agreements were made and were effectuated, what, in the opinion of the board, was the resulting effect upon the international shipments of gold.

(c) What, in the opinion of the board, was the resulting effect upon the pyramiding of bank credit and the general credit structure, speculation, and the price of stocks and bonds, commodity prices, including agriculture.

(d) What information, if any, does the board possess in regard to the amount of foreign money or credit represented in the call-loan report of the New York bank clearings within the last year.

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be respectfully requested to give the Senate any other information and such suggestions as, in their opinion, may be helpful to enact legislation for the purpose of stabilizing the international exchange, the domestic price level, and the value of the dollar as a medium of exchange.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have immediate consideration of this resolution if there is no objection. It is merely a resolution asking for information for the use of the Senate for the purpose of framing legislation. If there is objection, of course, the resolution will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I could hardly gather the full intent of the resolution by simply hearing it read. I ask that it go over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

LAW OF AERIAL NAVIGATION (S. DOC. NO. 221)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, about the middle of December last there was held in this city an International Civil Aeronautics Conference. The Department of Justice was represented in that conference by one of the attorneys of that department, Mr. E. E. Danly. After the conference Mr. Danly, at the request of the Attorney General, wrote a memorandum upon the subject of the law of aerial navigation. Since that is new, and the first article of its kind, I believe, that has been written by any official of the Government, it will be exceedingly interesting not only to attorneys but to people generally. I therefore desire to give it the widest possible publication; and I ask unanimous consent that this article by Mr. Danly be printed in the RECORD, and also as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum for the Attorney General]

THE LAW OF AERIAL NAVIGATION

By E. E. Danly, attorney, the Department of Justice

As you know, by your assignment, I attended the sessions of the International Civil Aeronautics Conference held in Washington December 12 to 14, 1928, as a representative of the Department of Justice. Delegates were present from 40 countries. The forenoons of the convention days were given over to plenary sessions and during the afternoons subsessions were held for the discussion in more detail of different matters relating to aviation. One of these subsessions was devoted to a discussion of the law of aerial navigation, and I have thought it proper to very briefly state what seemed to me to be the general conclusions reached in the discussion. Since substantial progress in aviation has been made only within the past few years many of the legal problems are necessarily new and the conclusions reached were therefore not entirely definite. I am merely stating what seemed to be the prevailing views.

The development of the means of aerial navigation has suddenly opened a new territory to human access and made available a new field of commerce. Coincident with the occupancy and use of the new territory there has become necessary, as always it must, a statement and understanding of the rights incident to the occupancy and use. These rights naturally group themselves into two classes—first, the rights of states (the term being used in the international sense) in their relationship to other states and the nationals of other states; and, second, the rights between a state and its subjects and among its subjects.

I. AERONAUTICS IN INTERNATIONAL LAW

As might be expected, the advent of aerial navigation gave rise to conflicting views as to what principles should prevail in international relationships—whether there should be a freedom of air space somewhat similar to the freedom of the high seas or whether each state should possess a sovereignty, qualified or exclusive, over the air spaces above its domain. Between the year 1900 and the outbreak of the Great War three views had the support of adherents: First, there were those who held that the air not being susceptible of possession and subjection was therefore not subject to the exercise of the powers of sovereignty; second, others held that the state had certain rights in the air spaces above its territory which, however, did not amount to positive and exclusive rights of sovereignty; third, another group adhered to the view that each state possessed an exclusive and unlimited sovereignty over the air space supervening over its territory.

The principle of state sovereignty over air spaces was asserted in legislative enactments in Great Britain in 1911 and 1915, and was made the basis of an agreement between France and Germany in 1913. In Russia a ministerial decree was issued in 1913 forbidding the passage of aircraft of other countries over its western border. This decree was slightly modified upon a reciprocity basis. Different interpretations were placed upon these expressions and thus at the time of the beginning of the Great War considerable difference of opinion and confusion existed as to what doctrine should prevail.

Immediately after the outbreak of the war Switzerland proclaimed her neutrality and informed the belligerent powers that no foreign aircraft would be permitted to fly over Swiss territory. Passage of aircraft over her territory was later characterized by Switzerland in protests submitted to the offending governments as violations of her sovereignty. Other neutral powers followed this lead with similar declarations. No belligerent lodged a protest against the attitude taken by these states and that attitude gained the support of custom and public opinion. The principle, thus strengthened, has since had almost universal approval in international conventions and in the legislative enactments of most states, including the United States.

With the acceptance of the principle of state sovereignty it at once became apparent that unless the privilege of innocent passage was accorded by each state to the nationals of other states aerial communication between states could not be had. No law existed under which a right of such innocent passage could be claimed. The principle of aerial sovereignty born of international custom observed during the war was silent on the point of innocent passage, and it became necessary that there should be some manifestation of the granting of this necessary privilege. This manifestation took the form of group action in two important instances, and in the form of bilateral treaties in a great many instances. The first of the important group actions was the Air Navigation Convention of October 13, 1919, held in Paris. Twenty-eight states, including those which entered the compact at its inception and those which have since joined, have ratified this treaty. The United States signed the convention but has not ratified it. The doctrine that each state has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the air spaces above its territory was accepted by the states joining the convention as fundamental, and it became a basis upon which the joint agreement was predicated. The convention was prompted by the fact that the contracting parties recognized the progress of aerial navigation and that the establishment of rules of universal application was desirable. In the convention each contracting state undertook to accord in time of peace freedom of innocent passage above its territory to the aircraft of other contracting parties, provided the conditions of the convention were observed. The second important example of group action was the Habana convention, dated February 20, 1928, which was signed by 20 Latin-American States and by the United States. This convention has not been ratified by any of the states party to it unless such ratification has taken place very recently. It has not been ratified by the United States. In the Habana convention a substantial part of the rules relating to navigation of the air was adopted, in many instances, in the identical language used in the Paris convention. The principle of state sovereignty was recognized and the contracting parties accorded to each other the privilege of innocent passage.

More than 500 bilateral treaties regulating the conduct of international air navigation and prescribing the conditions upon which freedom of innocent passage has been accorded by each of the contracting parties to the national aircraft of the other have been made. In addition to this many states have passed domestic legislation covering navigation of the air over their territories in which the principle of air sovereignty is accepted, and in none of this legislaton can there be found provisions denying the freedom of innocent passage to the aircraft of other states on peaceful mission.

Since freedom of innocent passage is an accorded privilege it may be exercised only in compliance with such conditions as may be imposed. The conditions usually imposed relate to safeguarding the interest of the state flown over, designating the frontier points of entry and departure, designating places where they may or shall land in case the course is not a transstate flight, transporting of material by which the danger to life and property is enhanced, the prohibiting the carrying of photographic apparatus except under restrictions requiring that suitable nationality and identification marks be displayed on the craft, reserving the right to visit and inspect alien aircraft, requiring that the craft be airworthy and manned by competent crew, requiring that the provisions of the immigration laws be met, and many other things.

These general rules of conduct applying to international air navigation have arisen largely as the result of an almost universal acceptance of the doctrine of state sovereignty and the recognition of the necessity of permitting freedom of innocent passage to national aircraft of sister states in time of peace. As time goes on and these principles receive support from continued application and recognition they, and others, probably will make for themselves a definite place in the law of nations.

II. DOMESTIC LAW OF AERONAUTICS

The field of law as applied to aeronautics as an industry is very broad and covers a large number of phases. The question of state sovereignty over air space raises a fundamental problem in the consideration of the law of aviation as applied within a given state, for the right of the state to control navigation of the air space over its territory is dependent on the existence of such sovereignty. As has been stated, it is now generally conceded that such sovereignty exists. Much of the domestic legislation on the subject presupposes the existence of such sovereignty and the existence of the right to control and regulate the use of the air spaces.

Another fundamental problem, one which applies more directly to private law than to public law, is the question of the ownership of the air spaces. Here we find ourselves confronted with the ancient maxim that the owner of the ground owns to the center of the earth and the air space to the heavens above. If this principle were to obtain without qualification as a fundamental principle of law every flight of an airplane over property owned by another would constitute a trespass and render the trespasser liable for such damage, if any, as might be proven, and a repetition of such trespass might be enjoined. The American Bar Association has urged upon the states the passage of uniform air law granting a legal right of flight over all privately owned property, and this law has been adopted by many states. It is to be noted that the principle of law above referred to was adopted at a time when it was unimportant who owned the air spaces above reasonable heights, and there is a general feeling among the leaders of the bar that the courts will gradually recede from their former position and that the question of trespass will be obviated. An indication of this trend of legal thought appears in the case of Johnson v. Curtiss Northwest Airplane Co. et al., which was tried in a district court of Minnesota and not reported, in which Judge James C. Michael made the following comment:

"Condemnation of air lanes is not feasible, because aircraft can not adhere strictly to a defined course.

"Common-law rules are sufficiently flexible to adapt themselves to new conditions arising out of modern progress, and it is within the legitimate province of the courts to so construe and apply them.

"The air, so far as it is in direct relation to the comfort and enjoyment of the land, is appurtenant to the land, and no less the subject of protection than the land itself, but when, as here, the air is to be considered at an altitude of 2,000 feet or more, to contend that it is a part of the realty, as affecting the right of air navigation, is only a legal fiction, devoid of substantial merit. Under the most technical application of the rule, air flights at such an altitude can amount to no more than instantaneous, constructive trespass. Modern progress and great public interest should not be blocked by unnecessary legal refinements.

"Failure to sustain the plaintiff's contention relative to upper air trespass does not deprive him of any substantial rights or militate against his appropriate and adequate remedies for recovery of damages and injunctive relief in cases of actual trespass or the commission of a nuisance * * *."

It may therefore be said that the legal right of flight over private property is supported by Federal statute, the statutes of many States, by court decisions, and by the predominating opinion of the members of the bar generally.

In the United States, where we have 48 States, each with a limited independent sovereignty of its own, there are additional problems. In 1926, when Congress passed the regulatory act, it committed the administration of the act to the Secretary of Commerce. Power of Congress over this subject is derived from the commerce clause of the Constitution and its application must, therefore, be limited to the regulation of aircraft engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to and has made regulations requiring the registration of airplanes, establishing rules of flight, fixing a standard of efficiency for aircraft, and covering many other phases of the industry. As stated above, the regulatory measures which have been so adopted by many of the States conform in many particulars to that adopted in the Federal act. An effort is now being made to unify the State enactments as much as possible.

On the question of liability of the transport company to passengers or to the owners of freight being transported there are few, if any, decisions. The discussion at the conference indicated that the transport companies have assumed that they would be liable for such losses and have protected themselves by insurance. The premium rates of the insurance companies are based upon the assumption that the liability is actual and they have not contested the question. Liability to the passenger where he is an adult and otherwise competent to contract is usually released in advance, but there may be some doubt whether such a release would be effectual where the transport company is a common carrier with established routes and schedules and holds itself out to carry anyone for a stipulated compensation. There is also doubt as to whether the passenger could by waiver release the transport company from liability to the members of his family in favor of whom liability might otherwise exist.

On the whole, the view generally held was that liability of an owner and/or operator of aircraft for damages occuring through his fault or neglect to the persons and property of others is based upon, and will be determined by, the ordinary and familiar rules of law applicable generally to liability for damages from such cause. This, also, is a risk which the insurance companies assume, and neither the transport company nor insurance companies have resisted liability in the courts.

Doubtless, cases will arise at an early date, at which these questions of liability will be determined. Since attending the conference my attention was attracted to a press report of a case in Chicago, in which an aviator was held liable for damages done by him in flight to an automobile belonging to the plaintiff.

In this short memorandum I have attempted to speak of some of the questions which were discussed at the conference. There are, of course, a great many legal propositions involved in the industry which did not have special application to aviation as an industry, and these questions are therefore omitted. Navigation of the air is in its infancy. In the discussions at the conference the belief was expressed that as the industry is developed a field of law of corresponding importance will be opened.

COMPACTS BETWEEN NEW MEXICO AND OKLAHOMA, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, and calls it to the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS].

The legislative clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 9, 1929.

Resolved, That the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Oklahoma with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Cimarron River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, there are in all five bills covering practically the same purpose. The Senate struck from those bills one line of the House language which limited the choice of a Federal representative to an employee of the Department of the Interior.

Our Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation feel that we should have a conference. I therefore move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. If that motion is agreed to, I shall ask the same action on all five of these bills.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I understand from the chairman of the committee that the committee expressed a desire at its meeting this morning for a conference on these so-called compact bills.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is correct.

Mr. BRATTON. In deference to the committee, I shall not oppose the motion of its chairman; but it seems to me the point at issue is insignificant as compared with the importance of the legislation. I therefore express the hope that an early conference will be had, and an agreement regarding the bills reached, in order that their passage at the present session of the Congress may not be jeopardized.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is the desire of our Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the same order will be entered in connection with all the bills.

The bills referred to are as follows:

H. R. 6497. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, Pecos, and Canadian or Red Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested;

H. R. 6499. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Arizona with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Gila and San Francisco Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested;

H. R. 7024. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and New Mexico with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, San Juan, and Las Animas Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested; and

H. R. 7025. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Oklahoma, and Kansas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Arkansas River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

LANDS IN BOX ELDER COUNTY, UTAH

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on Saturday last House bill 15328 was passed. It was a bill originating in the House, introduced by Representative LEATHERWOOD, of the State of Utah. It dealt with an exchange of lands owned by the State for lands owned by the Government.

Before the same committee, the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, was another bill which provided for the exchange of lands for the purpose of enlarging or consolidating the migratory-bird refuge in Utah. The lands were in the same county. When House bill 15328 was called up for consideration by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], a member of the committee, he was under the impression, as was I, that it was another bill, one dealing with the bird refuge instead of the bill offered by the Representative from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD].

Not understanding the situation, we made a statement with reference to the bill which was not quite accurate. I therefore move that the vote by which that bill was passed be reconsidered, in order that we may state the facts accurately.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will that displace the unfinished business?

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that it do not displace the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion should be to request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope my colleague will not ask for that now. Is there anything wrong with the bill?

Mr. KING. Not a thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Then why reconsider the vote by which it was passed?

Mr. KING. I would not want the RECORD to stand showing that the Senator from New Mexico and myself obtained the consideration of a bill upon an inaccurate statement. That is the only reason I have for speaking about the matter. Just as soon as the motion to reconsider was carried, I was going to ask that the bill be considered by the Senate and passed, because there is no objection to it; but I want the RECORD to show the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator from New Mexico report that bill or did I report it?

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Mexico reported it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I reported the bill on behalf of the committee, it went to the calendar, and was reached in due course last Saturday.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember it now.

Mr. BRATTON. The junior Senator from Utah is slightly inaccurate in saying that the bill was called up at my request. It was reached upon the calendar in regular course. During the consideration of the bill, and in making an explanation of it, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the junior Senator from Utah as well as myself made some observations which applied to another bill instead of the one we were then considering.

Mr. SMOOT. Would not the statements which have been made now by the two Senators correct the situation just as well as having the bill returned?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would not want to lie under the imputation of having secured the passage of a bill by an inaccurate statement, even though every Senator wanted the bill passed. I felt it to be my duty, and I am sure the Senator from New Mexico feels the same way, to invite the Senate's attention to the matter, and to have the bill restored to the same status in which it then was, and then to ask that it be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to having it come back, if there is any feeling about it at all.

Mr. KING. There is no feeling, except a desire to be accurate, and not to take advantage of any Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

Mr. BRATTON. I thought, and I think the junior Senator from Utah believed, that the bill we were then considering was the one which the senior Senator from Utah reported to the Senate yesterday and asked to have considered. That bill was discussed in the committee; I understood that I was to report it, and thought that I had done so until yesterday, when I learned from the clerk of the committee that instead of my reporting it it had been handed to the senior Senator from Utah and was presented by him yesterday and was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BRATTON. So that the junior Senator from Utah and I acted in the utmost good faith, but we were discussing one bill when another one was actually pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Utah desire to move that the bill be returned from the House?

Mr. KING. I did not know that it had left the Senate. I had supposed we could act upon it this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill went over to the House. Does the Senator desire to have the bill recalled from the House?

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] whether, with this explanation, I having stated to the Senate accurately what the facts are, he desires the bill recalled in order that the motion to reconsider may be affirmatively acted upon, and then the bill be taken up and passed again?

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President; I intended to say that I was absolutely satisfied of the good intentions of both Senators. I know that neither one of them attempted to deceive me or the Senate. So I think it would be well just to allow the bill to remain in the House, and the committee of the House will make any corrections it thinks wise to make.

Mr. KING. I am entirely satisfied. I did not want the Senate to think we took advantage of them to secure the passage of a bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, with that understanding I do not ask that the bill be recalled, but having reported it and having discussed it on the floor, I should want the situation thoroughly understood by every Member of the Senate if the bill is to remain in its present status.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3955) for the relief of the C. Tisdall Co., Herbert W. Smith, Newman Bros., Thomas J. Murphy Co., formerly Edward A. Brown Co., and Giles P. Dunn, jr.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 4258. An act to authorize credit in the disbursing accounts of certain officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department; and

H. R. 7166. An act to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army of the United States on account of refunds made to purchasers of surplus war supplies.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16422) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. HOLADAY, and Mr. GRIFFIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MORIN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. MCSWAIN were appointed managers on the part of the House.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16422) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

BATTLE FIELDS OF BRICES CROSS ROADS AND TUPELO, MISS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 to the bill (H. R. 15386) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment inserting a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, whenever necessary, authorize the charging and collection from owners of a reasonable fee for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock subject to the provisions of the said act for the purpose of determining the ownership of such livestock: Provided further, That such fee shall not be imposed except upon written request made to the Secretary of Agriculture by the board of livestock commissioners, or duly organized livestock association of the States from which such livestock have originated or been shipped to market.

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to Senate amendment numbered 15.

The motion was agreed to.

THE BOSTON POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have been trying to get the floor since my colleague made some comments with reference to the Boston postmastership. I feel that I should not allow what he has said to go unchallenged, particularly with reference to his assertion that as managed by the present postmaster the office has been used for Democratic activities.

The present postmaster at Boston is a Republican. He was appointed against the opposition of the Democratic leaders of Boston, and President Wilson selected him as the highest on a civil-service list, after an exhaustive examination as to the qualifications of some 75 candidates. The Democratic organization thought that a Democrat ought to have the appointment in that city, but Mr. Baker being first upon the list——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the junior Senator from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. GILLETT. The Senator does not mean to indicate that Mr. Baker was at that time a Republican, does he?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I certainly intended to indicate that he was not a Democrat.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to say that I did not think he was a Republican; I supposed he was a Democrat.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was the Democratic Senator from Massachusetts at the time and was not in favor of his appointment. I did vote to confirm him, because his was the highest name upon the civil-service list. I think I had some opportunity of determining, as the Democratic Senator from Massachusetts at that time, as to whether Mr. Baker was a Democrat or not. I believe he was supposed to possess independent views, but he is a Republican. He supported the Republican candidate for the Senate in the last election. He supported the Republican candidate for the Senate two years ago, when I was a candidate, and one of the most frequent charges I heard preferred in that campaign was that the postmaster was allowing the post office to be used to promote the election of the then chairman of the Republican National Committee and the Republican candidate for Senator.

I do not know Mr. Baker; I think I have talked to him not more than five minutes in the entire time he has been postmaster at Boston. I have had a good deal of correspondence with him, and I do not mind making reference to a personal fact, if I may be pardoned, that Mr. Baker has again and again, publicly and privately, approved of the consistent course I have taken in insisting that promotions in the post office be based upon length of service and upon merit.

I do not hesitate to defy anybody to produce one scintilla of evidence of influence that I have tried to use, by letter or in person, with Mr. Baker or any other postmaster, except in an insistence that efficiency and seniority alone be considered in making promotions.

Boston is a Democratic city, as my colleague has properly said, and there are Democrats and Republicans in the Postal Service; but to say that Democrats in the Postal Service of Boston have violated their civil-service obligations and participated in politics, is a reflection upon the alertness of the Republican leadership, who could have preferred charges and eliminated from the Postal Service any Democrat who was active, if there have been such.

This is all propaganda to find an excuse for removing Mr. Baker, who is to be removed from the postmastership of Boston because he has not been an active Republican, because he has not used his office for the promotion of Republican ends.

I did call attention the other day to the character of the civil-service examinations for postmasters, and I did it for this reason: That I find an impression throughout this country about the matter which is not justified by the facts. Letters repeatedly come to me and other Senators inquiring about the civil-service character of these examinations for postmasterships and as to the extent that civil service controls these appointments. I find a great many people believe it is an honest, sincere real civil-service examination and test; I find a great many people believe that postmasterships are under the classified civil service of the country. I call attention to this Boston postmastership situation for the purpose of giving evidence to the people of Boston and the country of what really does take place in the matter of the appointment of postmasters.

I challenge any Senator here to contradict the fact that these steps are followed in the appointment of every postmaster in this country to-day: First, the politicians of the dominant party meet and decide whom they would like to have for postmaster. That is just what they did in the Boston situation. Their work was not discreet enough, however. They announced their intention in the papers. They told of their trips to the White House. They gave interviews at the White House as to the fact that they were here for the selection of a man for postmaster. They named the man they are going to nominate; the man who was later named. All this before any examination at all or before any talk of an examination. They even went so far as to ask the President for an Executive order doing away with the examination, and, to his credit, he refused to do that. I challenge anybody here to deny the fact that the first step taken in the selection of a postmaster is for the politicians to suggest and urge somebody to apply to take the examination when the announcement is made of an examination.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am exceedingly interested in this discussion, not because I have any interest in the Boston postmastership but because of the general principle involved in the matter. One thing I do not understand in the Senator's attitude, which I wish he would explain, is this: Assuming these things which the Senator has narrated to be true, and of course I do assume them to be true, how can he still say that the Civil Service Commission is not at fault? Whose fault is it? Where is the trouble? Who has violated the spirit of the law?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The trouble is that the executive department has not placed these appointments under the classified civil service. There would have been less abuses if President Harding and President Coolidge had pursued the policy President Wilson followed of naming the first man on the list after the investigations of candidates by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with that; still, the fact remains that these politicians were successful in so maneuvering that the man they wanted secured the office under the guise of having passed the civil-service examination. It seems to me either the civil service must be at fault or somebody is.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator knows that the Civil Service Commission does only 50 per cent of the examination; the Post Office Department does the other 50 per cent. Has the Senator found a civil-service spirit in the appointment of postmasters in the Post Office Department of the Government?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have in some instances, and I have found the same thing the Senator has called attention to where that spirit did not exist. I think a great many of the appointments are made absolutely on the square, but there are a great many made where the officials resort to some method, some maneuver behind closed doors, by which the spirit of the law is violated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I rather agree with the Senator, and I do not want to be understood as stating that all appointments made to postmasterships are not made on real merit, and with a purpose to carry out the real spirit of the civil service law. Much depends upon the recommendation of the Senator or Congressman and the influences that actuate him. The present method invites political influence. What I am trying to point out is the usual method of procedure, and I say it is, first, the selection of a local man whom the politicians propose to back for the office; next, an examination, an examination which is an inquiry by an inspector of the civil service and one from the Post Office Department in the community where the applicants live among leading citizens as to their qualifications, together with a rating based on information as to the applicant's business experience.

I have on my desk now letters from men who were among the 14. I think that is about the number of applicants, who applied for examination who say that no one ever called upon the persons whom they named as references who could vouch for them. In fact, there has been no rating made except of 3. The other 11 or more applicants are branded as men who are not capable of being considered seriously for the job as postmaster. Under such circumstances there is certain to be criticism of the method of investigation and rating.

Mr. NORRIS. If they did not call on those men does it not follow that some one is derelict in duty and is not that some one the Civil Service Commission who ought to have called on them?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Every person who applied in good faith ought to have had all of his qualifications considered and ought to have been given a rating as were those three men who were marked for their qualifications.

I have referred to the second step, namely, the kind of examination given. Then comes the actual political influence. Three names are submitted to the President and the one selected is invariably the man recommended to the Postmaster General by the Congressman from the district where the post office is located.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the case invariably even though the man highest on the list is an ex-service man. Cases of that kind have repeatedly been submitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads without any result whatever.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] suggests that in his experience he has found that the politicians always succeed in naming one of the three whose names have been submitted to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to say, if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] insists on his statement, that the Senators from Kansas always give preference to ex-service men, no matter where they stand on the list.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator from Kansas does, but the Senator from Kansas does not control these matters. The nomination comes to the Senate from the President of the United States. It goes to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I have myself presented to that committee the case that I spoke of, of the man standing highest on the list of the three that took the examination, and despite my appeal for the appointment of the man standing on the highest list, he being an ex-service man, I was unable to secure his appointment, and I was unable to secure the rejection of the nomination by the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senators from Kansas previously had the appointments from two districts in which they were called upon to make recommendations. We now make recommendations in only one district. It has been our rule always to recommend an ex-service man, even if he was third on the list, and he has been appointed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have no doubt the Senator has done so. But that is not what I complain about at all. What I assert is that the nomination is finally made upon the recommendations of the representatives in Congress of the dominant party without regard to the fact that the applicant stands highest on the list is an ex-service man, or whether he is third or first in the rating.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have only one appointment as postmaster in which I take any interest whatever and that is the appointment in my home town. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that the names of the three highest on the list were submitted to me. I took the highest, notwithstanding the fact that my own brother stood second. I recommended the man who obtained the highest rating.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If we are going to have civil service in the appointment of postmasters why should the department submit anything to the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Montana or the Senator from Utah? Why should they be allowed to select postmasters? Why should their recommendations prevail, especially in towns remote from their home town, where they do not have, and can not have, any personal knowledge of the character and fitness of the applicant? Why should they be allowed to name the postmaster? What I am complaining about is the pretended civil service as applied to postmasters. Let us either go back to the old pie-counter system and let the victors have the spoils, or let us stop the deception and let the civil-service system prevail.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not think we are away from the pie counter, does he?

Mr. NORRIS. I had been away from it so long I do not know what it looks like. I doubt if I would recognize it if I should see it again.

I am not referring to any party. I am not referring to any organization. I think it has been the same all the way through. I concede that the present plan is better than the old system. Assuming that it is better, assuming that the examination is fair, which it is not always, in my judgment, though perhaps in the majority of cases it is, but even where it is fair, the politicians seem to have some way of affecting even the examination itself. But assuming it is on the square, three names are selected and the department submits those names to somebody. If it is a Republican administration and a Republican district and the Congressman is in good standing with the administration, the list is submitted to him, and if he is not in good standing the list is submitted to the Senator, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] said it used to be in his case with reference to two districts, but that now he and his colleague have only one postmastership. Why should it be submitted to them, and yet we in the same breath proclaim that we are appointing postmasters on merit?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Nebraska has stated exactly my grievance. I assert that we are not appointing postmasters on merit but upon political influence under an appearance of civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. In the State of Montana the Republican national committeeman handles the patronage. If we had a Democratic national administration and there was a Republican representing a certain district, the matter would be submitted to a Democratic Senator or, in some cases, to the Democratic national committeeman.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is in error about that.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope so, but I have been through the mill too often not to know something about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Massachusetts can give some very definite information about that phase of the matter. I recall distinctly that when the postmaster was appointed by President Wilson, he was the man who stood highest upon the list. President Wilson was determined that the civil service rules should apply and, despite the protest of the then Senator from Massachusetts, the Republican who stood highest upon the list was appointed by President Wilson.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not dispute that. As I said, there are a good many of them appointed absolutely on the square, but I know of my own personal knowledge that under the Democratic administration the same thing happened. They demanded a new examination where they did not get on the preferred list any of the men they wanted, and they swept it aside and had another examination and kept on until they got their man on the list and then they had him appointed. I know the same thing has happened under the present administration in many instances where I have personal knowledge of the results.

The thing I am complaining about is, why do we pretend and why does any administration pretend that it is appointing postmasters purely on merit, when they are connected with the machines and the bosses and the political leaders who in one way or another so often get their way in spite of any civil service rule or any civil service law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Under the classified civil service it is a violation of regulations for a public official to inquire into the politics of any of the three persons whose names are submitted to him from which to make an appointment. Under the classified civil service law no man can be removed from office without a hearing. In the matter of the appointment of postmasters, every Senator knows that the Congressman or Senator is consulted and party politics do enter into the selection of one of the three names certified. Politics is the important consideration. We also know that when a postmaster's term expires he is not given a hearing, but is removed if the appointing power sees fit to do it, and another postmaster appointed in his stead.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to say to the Senator that on yesterday I received a letter from the postmaster at Crosby, N. Dak., saying that because of the fact that he had been active in politics during the last campaign he had been suspended. He was a Republican. It happened, however, that he was not active on behalf of the Republican National Committee and had issued some statement saying that he would not support some of the candidates running for office on the Republican ticket. He was simply suspended from office and the Congressman from his district wrote him a letter telling him that he regretted exceedingly, but that he had been suspended and they would have to appoint another man.

In the city of Butte they are trying to put out of office the postmaster because of the fact that he was not active enough in politics in the last campaign. He kept entirely out of politics and because of that fact he is to have his official head chopped off.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is what happened to Mr. Baker in Boston.

Now, Mr. President, I want to close what I have to say and I am sorry the discussion had been protracted. My only purpose in discussing the subject originally and in discussing it this morning was to clarify if possible in the public mind the real method of selecting postmasters and to remove the impression that genuine civil service is controlling. I do not know that I want to be put in the position of being critical of the Republican administration for pursuing the methods which they are pursuing. That is not my purpose in this discussion. My purpose is to show that it is party politics and that it is not classified civil service; but that politics does enter into the question and is the dominant feature and practice in the appointment of these postmasters and that the public who have the notion that postmasters are under general civil-service regulations are far from possessing the actual knowledge.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I would like to ask the Senator whether, when Mr. Baker was first appointed all the other persons on the eligible list were or were not Republicans.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. When Mr. Baker was first appointed I think the number of candidates was 75 or 80, and I should say, roughly speaking, that 50 per cent were Democrats and 50 per cent were Republicans.

Mr. BRUCE. But the eligible list was made up of three persons.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No; not at that time. Only one, the highest, was certified. At that time President Wilson issued an Executive order confining his choice to the first on the certified list, and Mr. Baker was at the head of the list.

Mr. BRUCE. Afterwards the eligible list of three was created?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. By Mr. Harding when he became President.

Mr. BRUCE. I think, of course, the whole trouble is that the postmasterships are not brought under the full operation of the civil-service system or the Federal merit system of appointment. But when the Senator has concluded I want to say a little about the letter from the president of the Civil Service Commission which was read at the desk this morning, because I do not think anything could more completely vindicate the exercise of judgment by a public servant than that letter does.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have nothing further to say upon the matter under discussion except again to point out as I have tried to do in my brief discussion the fact that the selection of the present postmaster in Boston was originated through political influence, and the man who was finally named was selected by the Republican organization of Massachusetts, that it was they who came to Washington and got the President to order another examination and that the result of that examination was that Mr. Gow was first on the eligible list and was named to the office.

If the Civil Service Commission wants to preserve its prestige and retain public confidence in the civil-service system, it will urge the disassociation of itself from joint examinations that are certain to be suspected of political intriguing, and it should lose no opportunity to impress upon the public that the selections of postmasters is only a veneer of the civil-service system.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BROOKHART obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring for an hour to secure recognition to offer something for the RECORD. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for that purpose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BROOKHART. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs has for some time been investigating the administration of the laws in relation to the Indians. The work has been interrupted by reason of the fact that the funds allotted to the committee for the investigation have been exhausted. Application for additional funds has been made and the matter is pending and has been pending, as I understand, for some considerable time before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

I have here a letter from an intelligent and competent Indian in my State—I think, perhaps, the most intelligent and competent of the Indians who come to Washington occasionally—who discusses the matters relating to the investigation. I ask that his letter may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

LODGE GRASS, MONT., February 5, 1929.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have been reading the printed hearings which you sent me, and I want to tell you that the testimony submitted to the Senate committee in California and elswhere is shocking and certainly merits the immediate attention of fearless champions like yourself.

The testimony of ex-Superintendent Hoffman, of Los Angeles, on page 631, explaining that Mr. Meritt, of the Indian Office, instructed him privately "to take care of" a Mr. Rye, his brother-in-law, who was always drunk, etc., and who later, in spite of Mr. Meritt's instructions, caused his dismissal, and himself as a matter of reprisal was transferred to some ungodly place in Utah, which he didn't and wouldn't accept, and resigned.

It is the same old story. Those in authority at Washington consider the Indian Bureau established for the protection of their friends and relatives in the service instead of the Indians themselves.

The evidence gathered by the Senate itself is now before Congress. I wonder if any one of the courageous champions there will feel impelled to rise in righteous indignation and in the Halls of Congress raise a protesting voice and in defense of the Indian ring forth a demand for a searching inquiry and house cleaning of the Indian Bureau and the removal of employees who may be indicted.

The civil service has in many ways been a cloak to shield such scoundrels as has been uncovered in the hearings. I have often, in this connection, wished I were a Member of Congress and had the privileges of the floor and were able to bring there matters as I should like to the attention of Congress and the country. I certainly would see to it that the Indian Bureau at least exerted itself in honest effort at relief for the Indians and such testimony as that gathered by the Senate were impossible.

All we at home can do is to appeal to you, our representatives in Congress, to act; and if you refuse, then, of course, we are rendered helpless and must continue to absorb the abuses testified to before your committee until such time as Members of Congress feel disposed to rise in our defense.

I shall be pleased to have your opinion upon this matter, and, better yet, a bitter speech in the Senate condemning those responsible for the existence of such abuses and evils.

Your friend,

ROBT. YELLOWTAIL.

You are at liberty to use this letter as an exhibit if you choose in the RECORD to record and explain my personal views.

R. Y.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the junior Senator from Montana?

Mr. BROOKHART. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word with reference to the investigation of Indian affairs, and I shall have something further to say upon the matter later on.

I have been receiving inquiries from various parts of the country, and particularly from Montana, as to whether or not the investigation was to continue. Let me say to my colleagues that a studied effort has been made to stop this investigation. Only the other day I received a clipping from one of the newspapers stating that a joint resolution would be introduced providing that an investigation into the Indian affairs should be conducted by a committee consisting of two members of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, two members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, two members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and two members of the Appropriations Committee of the House. This, of course, was for the purpose of stopping the present investigation. Then shortly after the investigation by the Senate committee was inaugurated, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and made charges against a member of the committee itself, thereby seeking to stop the investigation. Then, again, we found, if you please, that in the case of an investigation being conducted by a grand jury the chairman of the Republican National Committee taking the matter up with the Attorney General of the United States and seeking to stop that investigation. So from the very beginning, every time that we have attempted to investigate the administration of the Indian Bureau something has intervened to try to stop it.

I do not think that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is seeking to stop this investigation. A preliminary investigation was made during the summer covering a number of reservations throughout the country. Reports have come from special investigators, which I have had occasion in the last day or so to examine, and those reports, in some instances, revealed things that were going on on various reservations which to me were startling. I wish to say that, in my judgment, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will be doing a serious injury to themselves as well as to the Indians of this country if this investigation shall not be allowed to proceed.

I desire to say further that, so far as I am personally concerned, when the investigation was ordered I asked the committee not to put me on the subcommittee because of the fact that I did not have time and did not want to go on the committee, but they insisted on my being on the committee. I was not able to take an active part in the work of the committee during the summer because of the campaign that was under way, but since that time I have had occasion to go into some of the things that have been reported to the committee, but have not been made public. If the reports of the investigators as to the conditions on the reservations in some of the States are true, then the Congress of the United States ought to know it, so that some remedy may be provided and such practices may be ended. I, therefore, hope that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will within the next day or so report the resolution to the Senate. Unless it does so, I feel that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to take some action to move to discharge the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate from the further consideration of the matter.

In the first place, I do not think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate ought to have anything to say relative to the merits of an investigation. I do not think they ought to say whether we ought to go into this kind of an investigation or ought to have this or some other kind of an investigation. That ought to be left to the judgment of the committee itself that is conducting the investigation. So I, for one, shall protest against the action of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate if it seeks longer to stifle the efforts of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROOKHART. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think we have all read accounts of what has been going on and what the investigation of the Indian Affairs Committee has brought out.

I think we have been startled and shocked at some of the things which it is openly announced have taken place. For instance, the Secretary of the Interior—I do not know whether the present Secretary of the Interior or the one whom he succeeded—made a request of the Attorney General for the cessation of an investigation before a grand jury in regard to some of the matters which the committee has been investigating, and pursuant to that request that investigation was called off and the grand jury was discharged.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it the Secretary of the Interior preceding the present incumbent who made that request, or had he gone out of office?

Mr. WHEELER. My recollection is that it was the Secretary of the Interior preceding the present incumbent. He had either just gone out of office or was just going out of office.

Mr. NORRIS. In either case, Mr. President, it was such an interference with the ordinary course of justice as ought not to be tolerated. From what has already been disclosed, it seems to me that this investigation ought not to be throttled. I have been wondering for some time why some member of the committee has not made a motion to discharge the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate from the further consideration of the matter. The rules of the Senate provide an easy method. A motion to discharge is a privileged motion; if objected to, it will have to lie over for one day; but it is privileged; and then, if it is carried by the Senate, it discharges the committee and puts the matter on the calendar, just the same as though the committee had reported it without recommendation. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate ought not to hold up an investigation; it is not the province of the committee to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that if the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate shall seek to hold it up and shall not give the investigating committee the money with which to carry on its work, I propose to stand upon the floor of the Senate so long as I am able to stand here and read into the RECORD from day to day the evidence which has been collected by the investigators so that it will get to the country. We have not as yet given it to the public because of the fact that the committee itself wanted an opportunity to ascertain and check up most carefully the truth of some of the statements which have been made. For instance, one statement was made to me that seems almost unbelievable with reference to what has been going on in the case of one of the reservations in my own State, where it is charged the superintendent is running his own sheep on the reservation of which he is superintendent.

Mr. NORRIS. On the Indian reservation?

Mr. WHEELER. On the Indian reservation.

As I have said, we have not made that public because we wanted to make a more careful check, but when we consider the large number of reservations throughout the country and the large number of Indians involved, and likewise the amount of money involved, it must be realized that the investigation is going to take a long time if it is to be conducted thoroughly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the charge is so seriously made and when the evidence already adduced indicates that there is something in the charge, it seems to me that the Senate would be derelict in its duty if it shut off an investigation concerning matters affecting the rights and the legal status of the Indians who are our wards. We ought not to rest under that kind of an imputation.

I have no personal knowledge of the matters being investigated except what I have read in the newspapers as to what has already been brought out by the investigation, but the disclosures so far make it perfectly clear, it seems to me, that the investigation ought not to be throttled. While I am not a member of the committee which has the investigation in charge, it seems to me it is the duty of that committee to do everything in its power to see to it that the investigation shall not be throttled, and then put the responsibility on the Senate by submitting a report and letting the Senate pass on the question.

SALE OF COTTON AND GRAIN IN FUTURE MARKETS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to discuss at some length the bill under consideration and also collateral matters related to it in reference to speculation in the United States.

On yesterday we heard a very peculiar argument. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] both advanced the theory that the cotton farmers of the South would be subject to the ravages of the big wolves of monopoly if the cotton and grain exchanges were curtailed, and as a remedy for that situation, feeling that this pack of wolves that would combine against the farmers was too powerful for them to withstand, they proposed also to turn loose on the farmer the coyotes of speculation, thinking, perhaps, that the farmers would come out better if they had two packs to fight instead of one. So far as I am concerned, I am for shooting all the wolves. The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Louisiana did not want to take a shot at the little coyotes—the speculators—because they said there were bigger wolves over on the other side of the hill.

I can not see the force of that argument. If speculation is wrong, I am for striking at it whenever I get an opportunity. If monopoly, if a combination to beat down the farmers' prices is wrong, I am for striking at that. I concede that if this bill should pass, that would not be the end of legislation necessary to protect the cotton farmers of the United States. I concede that it would be necessary to pass a bill to erect some other system of machinery to take its place; but is that any reason why we should hesitate to take the first step?

If we could pass a law that would stop this speculation now, then in the extra session that is soon to follow we could pass a law to take care affirmatively of the marketing of farm products, and thus solve the whole problem. Perhaps, if this law is not passed, we may be able to do that in the general farm bill that will be proposed at that time. I hope such is the fact.

Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to some of the things that agriculture has had to meet; and all the publicity going out even from our own Agricultural Department is to the effect that the condition of agriculture is getting better all the time. I have here some of their bulletins issued away back in 1928, and I have a bulletin of December 22 from the Business Conditions Weekly, by the Alexander Hamilton Institute, taken from the reports of the Agricultural Department. They say:

Slight gain in farm income.

Every bulletin they put out shows a gain or an improvement of some kind. Every statement the Agricultural Department makes is on the boosters' side, as though the farmers are about to reach the stage of prosperity. In the Washington Post of Sunday, February 10, there was a long statement again from the Agricultural Department; and it is said in that statement that the 1929 gross income of all the agricultural producers from both livestock and crops is forecast at about $12,500,000,000, an increase of approximately $250,000,000.

The headlines of this paper say:

Agricultural prosperity to continue during 1929.

And those are the figures upon which the big headlines are based.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call your attention to what $250,000,000 means to the farmers of the United States. There are 12,000,000 farmers—that is, men who make a hand on the farms of the United States—12,000,000 of them. That does not count the women and children who also work the year around on those farms. Divide 12,000,000 into $250,000,000, and you get a little bit less than $21 each. So this gigantic added "prosperity" to the farmers of the United States amounts to less than $21 per farmer; and when they need six or seven hundred dollars each to be equally prosperous even with the laboring people of the country—who are not getting their share of the national income, either—you can see at once that a little $21 increase does not bring any prosperity of any sort to the farmers of the United States.

Then, again, this article from the Agricultural Department shows a little farther down that in 1921 farm produce was worth but 69 cents in terms of the purchasing power of the dollar in 1914. In other words, in 1921 the dollar was down to 69 cents. To-day, this article says, on the same basis of value the purchasing power of the crop dollar is only a fraction under 93 cents. Therefore, while the farmer's dollar is still 7 cents below what it was in 1914, that fact is cited as an instance of commercial prosperity.

If you should reduce the dollar of any other business by even 7 cents, it would have a serious effect upon that business; but how is that 7 cents obtained? By comparing with the condition of the farmer in 1914, before the war; and his condition then was far from satisfactory. Probably 15 or 20 cents more ought to be taken off his dollar at that time in order truly to represent the condition of the farmer as compared with other business in 1914, and that would leave his dollar now at less than 80 cents.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Is this comparison as to the purchasing power of the agricultural dollar made with the purchasing power of the industries generally, or with the purchasing power at some previous time?

Mr. BROOKHART. It is made with the year 1914, according to the claim of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator any information or any data to show the purchasing power of his so-called dollar now as compared with the purchasing power of the other industries of even date?

Mr. BROOKHART. There is an index system of that kind, and the method of the Secretary of Agriculture in making that index has been severely criticized by some experts. I did not intend to go into that technical discussion to-day. However, I do desire to call attention to the fact that the farmer's condition in 1914 was not satisfactory, and I am going to quote some high authority upon that proposition. Here it is:

> In my mind most agricultural discussions go wrong because of two false premises. The first is that agriculture is one industry. It is a dozen distinct industries incapable of the same organization. The second false premise is that rehabilitation will be complete when it has reached a point comparable with pre-war.

That is, 1914.

> Agriculture was not upon a satisfactory basis before the war. The abandoned farms of the Northeast bear their own testimony. Generally there was but little profit in mid-west agriculture for many years except that derived from the slow increases in farm land values. Even of more importance is the great advance in standards of living of all occupations since the war. Some branches of agriculture have greatly recovered, but taken as a whole it is not keeping pace with the onward march in other industries.

That is from the acceptance speech of Herbert Hoover when he was nominated for President of the United States. Therefore I want to say to you that this 93-cent dollar of the farmer is based upon a false premise to start with. It ought to be based upon his equal rights with other industries, his cost of production with a cooperative profit. Instead of that, it is based upon the arbitrary date of 1914, which Mr. Hoover and everybody familiar with the situation know was not fair to the farmers of the United States.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. Is it not a fact that in the accounting to arrive at the dollar value the department uses the price that the farmer receives for his grain, but they do not use the price that he pays for machinery? They use the wholesale prices of what he consumes, but the retail prices of what he sells, and that is how they get up to the 93 cents.

Mr. BROOKHART. I understand that the system is subject to some such criticisms. I have not made the technical analysis of that point; but the Senator from South Carolina mentioned the same proposition a few moments ago.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the Department of Agriculture, which ought to be out fighting for the farmers of the United States, is out as an advance agent for the prosperity of Wall Street instead all the time. That is what I mean by this comparison.

Again, in this same article they point out that—

> Borrowed money probably will cost the farmer more in 1929 than it did in 1928, due to the high money rates enforced by the phenomenal industrial expansion and stock-market turnover in the last five years.

That is distinctly to the disadvantage of the farmers of the United States. If interest rates are to go higher because of stock speculation in New York, it means an added cost of production to the farmers of the whole country. There is no doubt about that situation. So, instead of advertising agriculture as in better conditions, the Department of Agriculture ought to be pointing out the facts that are injuring and bringing the farmer to this worse condition.

I get the reports from the referees in bankruptcy all the time. Bankruptcies are not declining among agriculture. They have increased a thousand per cent since 1910, and they are increasing more and more all the time. This little $21 that was added to the average income of the working farmers of the United States is not enough over what they received before to pay their interest rates and save them from foreclosure and from bankruptcy.

One of the most important phases of this credit question that is involved in the bill now under consideration is the question of speculation. I wish now to discuss the question of speculation particularly in reference to the Federal reserve bank and the Federal reserve law.

In this short discussion it is impossible to treat of anything but the most important points of the Federal reserve law and the most far-reaching acts in its administration. There is no doubt that the great purpose of the framers of the law was to mobilize the surplus credit of the country for legitimate purposes and remove it from speculation. This purpose is clearly outlined in President Wilson's message in which he said:

> We must have a currency, not rigid as now, but readily, elastically responsive to sound credit, the expanding and contracting credits of every-day transactions, the normal ebb and flow of personal and corporate dealings. Our banking laws must mobilize reserves; must not permit the concentration anywhere in a few hands of the monetary resources of the country or their use for speculative purposes in such volume as to hinder or impede or stand in the way of other more legitimate, more fruitful uses. And the control of the system of banking and of issue which our new laws are to set up must be public, not private; must be vested in the Government itself, so that the banks may be the instruments, not the masters, of business and of individual enterprise and initiative. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 50, 63d Cong., 1st sess., p. 4643.)

It is even more emphatically expressed in the presentation of the bill to the House by Senator GLASS, in which he said:

> The whole fight of the great bankers is to drive us from our firm resolve to break down the artificial connection between the banking business of this country and the stock speculative operations at the money centers. The monetary commission, with more discretion than courage, absolutely evaded the problem; but the Banking and Currency Committee of the House has gone to the very root of this gigantic evil and in this bill proposes to cut the cancer out. Under existing law we have permitted banks to pyramid credit upon credit and to call these credits reserves. It is a misnomer; they are not reserves. And when financial troubles come and the country banks call for their money with which to pay their creditors they find it all invested in stock-gambling operations. There is suspension of payment and the whole system breaks down under the strain, causing widespread confusion and almost inconceivable damage. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 50, 63d Cong., 1st sess., p. 4648.)

Again he said:

> The avowed purpose of this bill is to cure this evil.

Of what evil does the Senator from Virginia speak when he is presenting this bill for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, an evil which he calls a cancer? It is this evil of speculation. He said:

> The avowed purpose of this bill is to cure this evil; to withdraw the reserve funds of the country from the congested money centers and to make them readily available for business uses in the various sections of the country to which they belong. This we propose to do cautiously, without any shock to the existing arrangement, graduating the operation to prevalent conditions, and extending it over a period of 36 months. This affords ample time to the reserve and central reserve city banks to adjust themselves to the reserve requirements of the new system. Out of abundant precaution we have actually given them a longer time than the best practical bankers of the country have said was needed. But, Mr. Chairman, the plaint of these gentlemen is not as to time but as to fact. They do not want existing arrangements disturbed; they desire to perpetuate a fictitious, unscientific system, sanctioned by law but condemned by experience, and bitterly offensive to the American people—a system which everybody knows encourages and promotes the worst description of stock gambling. The real opposition to this bill is not as to Government control, upon which we shall never yield; it is not as to the capital subscription required, which is precisely that of the Aldrich scheme unanimously indorsed by the American Bankers' Association; it is not as to the 5 per cent dividend allowed member banks, the exact limit prescribed in the Aldrich bill; it is not as to compulsory membership, which was provided in another way in the Aldrich scheme; it is not as to the bond-refunding proposition, infinitely simpler and less expensive than the Aldrich device. It is none of these things, Mr. Chairman, that vexes the big bankers. It is the loss of profits derived from a system which makes them the legal custodians of all the reserve funds of the country, $240,000,000 of which funds, on the 24th day of November, 1912, they had put into the maelstrom of Wall Street stock operations. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 50, 63d Cong., 1st sess., p. 4648.)

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is the Senator reading?

Mr. BROOKHART. I am quoting from Senator GLASS's speech in the House of Representatives when he presented the Federal reserve act, as chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The cancer about which he spoke has now grown to about five billion?

Mr. BROOKHART. Over six billion.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will permit me, the remedy was evidently worse than the original disease.

Mr. BROOKHART. It has grown very greatly, as we will see.

From these statements of such high authority it is quite evident that the cancer of speculation was to be cut out of American business by this new Federal reserve law. If it failed in this, it failed in its primary purpose. I will first answer the fact as to this failure.

I do not quite understand what the figure of two hundred and forty millions used by Senator GLASS refers to, as the total brokers' loans at that time, according to the evidence taken by the Pujo committee, were seven hundred and sixty-six millions. I think that $766,000,000 is the figure for fair comparison with the present figure, rather than the $240,000,000 quoted by Senator GLASS in his speech. This was a vast sum of the people's savings, and to call it a cancer was fully justified. To operate upon it and cut it out was unquestionably demanded. But what has come of the Federal reserve law operation? During the past few months these same stock-gambling loans have run over $6,000,000,000. The cancer is now nine times as large as before the operation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, does the Senator think that inflation of the stock market is out of proportion with the inflation of the general credit structure in the United States at this time?

Mr. BROOKHART. Very greatly out of proportion, but not as to agriculture.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not the Senator think that the agricultural sections of the country are highly inflated?

Mr. BROOKHART. We shall see. I have some figures to show what I think about that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not the Senator think that the real-estate credit throughout the country is inflated?

Mr. BROOKHART. While these stock values were piled up so high in Wall Street real estate went down $20,000,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is very interesting. I did not know that inflation had started in real estate.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator is very sarcastic at times.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the Senator read the statement made by Mr. Thomas A. Edison yesterday in regard to the wild gambling orgy in New York, in which he said that if that thing went on long enough it would produce a panic?

Mr. BROOKHART. With that idea I am in full accord. I think Mr. Thomas A. Edison and Mr. Henry Ford both have some very definite and reliable ideas on that question.

Mr. HEFLIN. One other question in connection with that I want to ask the Senator. Some of these strange doctors of finance are already stating that there is too much money in circulation in the United States. The Senator does not agree with that view, does he?

Mr. BROOKHART. I agree that there is too much in Wall Street.

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree with the Senator in that, but there is not enough in the body of business.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is far from enough in the general business of the country.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator say how much money there is now of all kinds in the United States—gold, Federal reserve notes, national-bank notes, greenbacks, and silver certificates, actual money?

Mr. BROOKHART. I had those figures, but do not recall them at the present moment. I will get them for the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Approximately what is the amount?

Mr. BROOKHART. I have not put as much emphasis upon the actual amount of money in my discussion of this question as upon the amount of credit in use and the control of that credit.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator is right; there is very little money in the country compared with the credit.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very little compared with the credit.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator understands that when people talk about there being too much money in the country, they mean credit.

Mr. BROOKHART. They mean credit, I think.

Mr. President, if these brokers' loans were $766,000,000 in 1912, and if that sum was a cancer that threatened the life of this country, the present sum of six and a third billion dollars means, as I have said, that the cancer is nine times as large as it was. Therefore, upon the question of the primary purpose of the Federal reserve law, as expressed by its authors themselves, it is the most colossal failure in all legislative history.

Why has this law not only failed of its greatest purpose to reduce speculative loans but has actually multiplied the evil manyfold? The answer to this question is found in the law itself, and to understand it we must make a study of the fundamentals of the reserve-bank idea and of its fundamental purposes.

What is a reserve bank? What should it do for its member banks? What should it do for the public? Stripped of all camouflage and of all technical terms, a reserve bank does but two simple and fundamental things for its member banks.

First. The member bank has a surplus of funds which is more than its local demand, more than it can lend for a time to its regular customers. It would like to redeposit these surplus funds in its reserve bank for a few days or a few months with the right to recall them at any time when needed at home. It would also like to get a small return on these redeposits or bank balances. This I will call the redeposit business of the reserve bank, and it ought to be the biggest item of reserve-bank business.

Second. The member bank may be short of funds. The farmers are buying feeder cattle, the merchants are increasing their stocks, or the manufacturers are buying raw materials. For a time they are asking more credit than the local bank can furnish from its own deposits. This is a legitimate and sound demand. The local or member bank would like to borrow from its reserve bank for a short time and take care of the needs of its regular customers. It will therefore send some of its paper to the reserve bank for sale by rediscount and use the money to meet these demands. This I call the rediscount business of the reserve bank.

These two things—the redeposit business and the rediscount business—are the only two fundamental things a reserve bank can do for its members. They are the same two things that the member bank does for its individual customers. All your bank does for you is to receive your deposits for a rate of interest when you have a surplus and to lend you money for a higher rate of interest when you are short. That is all a reserve bank does for its member banks.

Now, what are the fundamental services of a reserve bank for the public good? They may be included in four propositions:

First. The reserve bank should furnish an elastic currency to meet the fluctuating demands of legitimate business. So far as the member banks are concerned, it only enables the reserve to do its two things for them more surely, to wit, to receive redeposits and to make rediscounts.

Second. Some things are too big for a member bank. The reserve bank should mobilize surplus credit and finance these big things, like financing the war. Legitimately done, this is a public service.

Third. The greatest service a reserve bank can do for the public is to make a more efficient use of the credit supply of the country and thereby under the law of supply and demand reduce the interest rates to the people at large. For instance, Iowa may be selling her crops and have a temporary surplus. She would like to redeposit in the reserve bank and get a rate of interest temporarily until it can be properly invested at home. At the same time Massachusetts may be buying raw materials and would like to rediscount her paper at a little higher rate of interest in the reserve bank to make these purchases. The reserve bank can therefore do a service to both States. This balancing of cross demands is going on all the time. Its proper functioning makes a much more efficient use of the credit supply, and the natural law would reduce interest rates at large.

Fourth. The reserve bank, with its large reservoir of mobilized credit surplus, can prevent panics.

I now want to inquire if this law and its administration have met these requirements and to point out wherein they have failed.

As to redeposits of member banks, the law requires that the reserves shall be redeposited in the Federal reserve, but without any interest rate. The reserves are only a part of the surplus funds of the member banks. The law permits that all of the surplus may be redeposited in the reserve banks, but no interest rate can be paid. This situation gives the New York banks a virtual monopoly of all that portion of the redeposits of member banks above the reserves required by law. They can put on an interest rate and fix it themselves and take all of this vast item of reserve-bank business away from the Federal reserve. This they have done. They are getting a vast sum of these redeposits at 1¾ to 2 per cent and lending to speculation until recently at an average of about 4 per cent, while the farmers of the country are paying an average of more than 8 per cent on their bank loans to produce the food of life. Recently stupendous speculation has greatly increased call rates. That is the cancer that was operated upon in the Federal reserve law by denying speculative loans the rediscount privilege in the Federal reserve banks. But what does a stock gambler care for an operation like this when the same law drives the redeposits of the country into his bank at an initial rate of 1¾ to 2 per cent? He has a better chance to get all the money he wants in his stock-gambling game at a low rate of interest if his bank can get redeposits at 1¾ or 2 per cent than if his bank were permitted to rediscount his paper at 3½ or 4 per cent. It is this provision of the law that has raised brokers' loans to the vast sum of about $6,000,000,000, mostly at a low rate of interest, and at the same time starved agricultural and business credit with a high rate of interest. The blame is upon the law rather than upon its administration.

For a moment I wish especially to discuss the present high rate on call loans. That rate went to 12 per cent. In view of the demonstration I have here given of so many and such vast sources of credit at a low rate of interest, it is ominous when the rate on speculative loans goes up to 12 per cent. It means that speculation is reaching somewhat of a desperate stage. They had $3,000,000,000 and more on an average all the time since 1920, at an average rate of less than 4 per cent, and now under present conditions they have been forced to borrow more and to pay as high as 12 per cent. That means a desperate condition in the stock market. That is a forerunner of panic and of disturbance of the worst kind.

There is some criticism of the Federal reserve system, both as to the law and its administration in reference to agricultural paper on the rediscount side of its business, but I pass that over and also pass the question of elastic currency and financing the war, but I challenge the law emphatically upon the question of lowering interest rates.

I obtained a book from the Federal Reserve Board entitled "Questions and Answers on the Federal Reserve System." On page 135 the question is asked, "Why is interest not paid on the reserve balance carried with the Federal reserve bank?" The answer is as follows:

> Because it is wrong in principle and would defeat one of the most important objects for which the Federal reserve system was established; namely, "to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper." If a Federal reserve bank were compelled to use at all times a large percentage of its resources to purchase paper in the open market for the purpose of earning interest to be paid to member banks on their reserve deposits, it is manifest that this would absorb funds to such a degree as to leave it without adequate resources to meet the needs of its member banks in case of sudden emergency or for heavy seasonal requirements.
> Moreover, even if this were not the case, member banks would probably lose far more than they would gain if Federal reserve banks should pay them interest on their reserve deposits. The reserve deposits held by all Federal reserve banks amount to approximately $2,200,000,000. The payment of interest at 2 per cent on this amount would require the Federal reserve banks to keep invested at all times at least $1,100,000,000 at 4 per cent for this purpose. If this sum were invested by the reserve banks in Government securities it would not only dissipate the reserves as above specified but would have the effect of increasing the supply of credit to such an extent as to force down interest rates. If the amount were used in the open market in the purchase of bankers' acceptances and bills of exchange, it would come in direct competition with member banks and by increasing the supply of credit would likewise tend to force down interest rates under ordinary conditions, and the loss to member banks on all their loans would doubtless far exceed the income they would derive from the 2 per cent interest on reserve deposits. (Questions and Answers on the Federal Reserve System, pp. 135–136.)

The first paragraph of this answer is untenable because the assets acquired by investing these funds to earn interest to pay upon the deposits of member banks might easily be made a basis of Federal reserve notes in sufficient amounts to meet all "sudden emergencies" or "heavy seasonal demands" for rediscounts.

The second paragraph of the answer is the plain and the whole truth. Let us analyze it. I have already pointed out that the greatest purpose of a reserve system, so far as the service to the general public is concerned, is to make a more efficient use of the credit supply and thereby reduce the interest rate generally. If it does not accomplish this great purpose, but on the other hand maintains high interest rates on the public while collecting a vast credit surplus for speculation at a low rate of interest, it is a menace to the general welfare and would better be abolished. The second paragraph of the answer shows plainly that interest is not paid on redeposits for the express reason that it would then be necessary to invest the funds to earn this interest, thus release other funds and increase the credit supply and lower the interest rate generally. This would benefit the public but might reduce bank earnings, which are many times the rate of farm capital earnings, hence it must not be done. This law is for the bankers and not for the farmers or manufacturers. Therefore the Federal reserve system describes itself in this answer as a money trust that extort a high rate of interest from the public at large, and outside the answer the facts show that it furnishes a vast reservoir of credit to speculation at a low rate of interest. Now it has overdone itself and raised the interest rate on speculation, too.

The last proposition is, Does the Federal reserve prevent panics? It has been widely heralded and eloquently proclaimed for possessing this great virtue. Let us examine the facts. Prior to 1920 it encouraged investment and was the most potent agency for promoting inflation. It was on the bull side of the market. It was, perhaps, the latter part of 1919 or the early part of 1920 that big finance decided this inflation had reached its peak. Plans were subtly laid long in advance for a deflation. Big business was getting ready to take the bear side of the market. The Federal reserve system joined the movement.

At this point I want to digress to say that a reserve bank has no right ever to adopt a deflation policy. Such a policy is always an economic crime. It has a perfect right to prevent inflation, but having encouraged inflation and approved the rediscounts and loans by which it was done, and then to turn around and call those loans and destroy the enterprises they had created and time it all to wreck agriculture is an economic crime beyond description. Yet that was substantially what was done by the financial crowd with the aid and assistance of the Federal Reserve Board.

The formal meeting at which it was all considered was on May 18, 1920. The Federal Reserve Board, the council, and the class A directors were present. I do not claim it was all planned and decided at this meeting.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator had read the report of the board he would have found that they began considering the question several months before, I think some time in December or January.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think the Senator is correct.

It had been fully considered and perhaps finally decided in the highest financial circles perhaps months before. This meeting was only a formal expression of the financial decree of our invisible government.

Governor Harding made his deflation speech. In it he used the following language:

> Thus the directors of Federal reserve banks are clearly within their rights when they say to any member bank, "You have gone far enough; we are familiar with your condition; you have got more than your share, and we want you to reduce; we can not let you have any more." (Federal Reserve Board conference, minutes; S. Doc. No. 310, 67th Cong., Feb. 24, 1923, p. 8.)

In this he was even suggesting the form of language a Federal reserve bank should use to require a member bank to reduce its loans. Much else to the same effect was said, although Governor Harding did mention certain needs of the cattle business. However, this was in random talk and not in the formal speech nor in the formal resolution approving the speech. This resolution of approval was passed by a unanimous vote. It approved a general policy of deflation which I denounce as economically criminal at any time. At the same time in view of this action, it passed another amazing resolution. While it was planning a general deflation, which would especially hit agriculture, it passed this other resolution to send a committee to the Interstate Commerce Commission and urge an immediate increase of railroad rates. It would deflate the farmers and general business, and inflate the railroads at the same time.

It did not stop with these proceedings which were made public. It considered a secret policy of applying economic force by raising the discount rate. The discount rate was already up to 6 per cent, an extortionate rate that ought to be prohibited by law. But this conference considered raising it to 7 per cent, and one unmitigated fool even suggested 8 per cent. Following this meeting some of the reserve banks actually raised it to 7 per cent. However, these facts were sealed up in secrecy, and at the close of the meeting Governor Harding gave the following instructions:

> I would suggest, gentlemen, that you be careful not to give out anything about any discussion of discount rates. That is one thing there ought not to be any previous discussion about, because it disturbs everybody, and if people think rates are going to be advanced there will be an immediate rush to get into the banks before the rates are put up, and the policy of the Reserve Board is that that is one thing we never discuss with the newspaper man. If he comes in and wants to know if the board has considered any rates, or is likely to do anything about any rates, some remark is made about the weather or something else and we tell him we can not discuss rates at all, and I think we are all agreed it would be very ill-advised to give out any impression that any general overruling of rates was discussed at this conference. (Federal Reserve Board conference, minutes; S. Doc. 310, 67th Cong., p. 62.)

Publicity was given out as to Governor Harding's speech and the resolution for higher railroad rates, but the matter of raising discount rates was kept secret so far as the general public was concerned. It was not secret as to big business. Perhaps it had been dictated by big business. One packing company whose banker was in that meeting immediately went out for a $60,000,000 loan and sold its paper at 8 per cent to get the money. Others did likewise a little later, and some were floating their loans before the meeting was held.

The defenders of the Federal Reserve Board say there was no deflation. What if the board and conference did talk about deflation—it was not done. The Federal reserve loans were increased and the country further inflated. This is a fact, and it is a double economic crime. Having decided upon deflation, they turned about and further inflated, which would enable those informed as to the situation to secure their loans and prepare for the crash that was coming. Perhaps part of this inflation was due to the demand for crop movement, but certainly a great part of it was due to this illicit purpose to help big business.

By and by all was ready, and in October, when all the crops were matured and the year's work of the farmer was ready for market, they came out into the open. Public meetings were held in all of the agricultural States. A representative of the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank held four of these meetings in Iowa. I attended the last one, at Ottumwa. He told us our loan allotment was $36,000,000 for the State; that they had been very kind to us and loaned us ninety-one millions, or fifty-five millions over our allotment. But he said the time had come when the people entitled to this credit wanted it, and we must, therefore, sell some of our crops and reduce these loans. I asked him who made this thirty-six million allotment to Iowa, and he did not know. Neither have I ever been able to find anybody who did know. Iowa had a crop at prices then prevailing worth more than a billion dollars. Three times the amount of loans we had would have been a low allotment. But there was no allotment. The figures announced were a straw man set up to have some excuse to call our loans down to that amount.

And they did call the loans. The bankers sent for the farmers, told them their loans must be reduced, and under threat of suit forced them to dump their crops and livestock into the market. Governor Harding's random remark about protecting livestock went for nothing. The market broke all along the line. There never was such a panic in prices of farm products in all the history of agriculture. In Iowa corn went down from $1.75 to about 27 cents per bushel, and all other farm prices went down in proportion. The Manufacturers Record says farm lands and the two crops of 1920 and 1921 were deflated in the whole sum of $32,000,000,000 and other business only eighteen billions. This means that agriculture was deflated about six times as much in proportion as other business, and that was little business. The Federal reserve bank had saved Wall Street from panic, but it handed the farmers the greatest panic in all their history. Big business was informed and protected itself by huge loans, made easy by illicit inflation even after deflation had been proclaimed.

The only big business man of whom I know who did not get the tip was Henry Ford. He was called about the same time the farmers were called. He owed $75,000,000 and the banks wanted the money. There was no other money to be had because all the loose credit had been gathered in by the big ones who got the tips; deflation was now on in dead earnest, and no new loans were being made. Even Ford was in danger of a great suit. Then the wise bankers went out from New York to see him. They offered to form a syndicate and take care of him, but on condition that he allow them to put an auditor in his business. Ford wanted none of their auditors in his business, and sent them back to New York on the first train. Ford then organized a little Wall Street all his own. He shipped his cars out to his dealers all over the country and required them to pay or get out of the Ford business. They went to the local banks and begged for credit to save their business. It was granted, and in a few days Ford had his $75,000,000 and a good many millions more. This took credit away from the farmers which might have been used to hold the crops and stop the price panic, but it saved the jitneys. In the same way the huge loans to the big packers, big oil and other interests absorbed the farmer's own savings and sent him to bankruptcy, while big business continued in prosperity.

It was an autocratic thing Ford did, but I can forgive him for two reasons: First, he was fighting for his life against the enemies of the farmers and laboring people; and second, I hope the farmers and laboring people will learn the same lesson out of this transaction that Henry Ford has learned. Look at his statements now. You will not find that item, "Bills payable, $75,000,000." Instead you will find an item something like "Cash on hand, $300,000,000." Henry Ford has become his own banker. Never again will he trust the life of his great business to loans in a credit system controlled in New York high finance. Neither will the farmers or the laboring people ever again enjoy a just share of our prosperity until they become their own bankers in a cooperative banking system, with reserve bank and all under their own control. We are the only civilized country in the world that by law prohibits such a system. The question is then asked, How did the engineers and others organize a cooperative bank if it is prohibited by law? They did not organize such a bank. There was no law to permit it even. They organized a regular national bank. They were forced by law to join the Federal reserve when in fact they preferred a cooperative reserve of their own. They have operated under partially cooperative by-laws, but news dispatches say they have recently abandoned even that. In spite of all these handicaps they have been a great success.

The farmers deposit far more in the commercial banking system than is ever loaned back to agriculture. Labor deposits many times more than is ever loaned back to labor. These greatest elements of our people who believe in the cooperative principle are entitled to as many privileges and as great encouragement for a cooperative banking system under the law as the commercial interests have for a commercial system. Under the laws as they now exist, both State and national, the commercial idea has the monopoly. Iowa but recently authorized cooperative banks, but no provision was made for a reserve bank. Nebraska has authorized them in general terms, but they are not defined in the law. Other States have credit union laws, but they do not contemplate a system, and become mere feeders for the commercial system.

In conclusion I desire to quote Myron T. Herrick, our ambassador to France, and one of the greatest bankers in our country, upon these propositions:

> There are no Federal or State laws in the United States under which the farmers might organize themselves into systems with credit societies as the basic units. (Rural Credits, by Myron T. Herrick, p. 479.)
>
> The machinery for credit in the United States is defective and inadequate from the point of view of agriculture. There is plenty of money, it is true, for well-to-do farmers who are able to meet all requirements imposed by the lender, but there are no means whatever for granting long-time loans, no arrangements, except in a few local and special cases, for promoting the movement of the people back to the land, no outside sources for short-time credit, nor any system whereby agriculture may have first use, as it should, of the wealth it creates for financing itself. (Rural Credits, p. 5.)
> But the figures (farm debts) have grown rapidly within the last 20 years and show that the debt is increasing at an accelerating rate and that farmers are paying a higher rate of interest than is justified by the security which they can offer. (Rural Credits, p. 6.)
> Furthermore, the shortest period needed for agriculture is too long for the banks, and so the 90-day paper of the merchant gets the preference over the 6-month or 1-year paper of the farmer. As a result, the major portion of the farmers' credit is not bankable under the present system, and only a comparatively small amount of their paper reaches the outside world. Consequently, when they wish to realize upon their credit to its fullest extent, the farmers must pay a premium for the risk incurred, besides the highest interest charged in their immediate vicinity. A new system to be added to the old is necessary to rectify this trouble also, in spite of the powers recently granted to national banks by the Federal reserve act of 1913. (Rural Credits, p. 8.)

Agricultural wealth and production in the United States are greater than in any other country. The figures are stupendous. In 1910 farm property was valued at $40,991,449,090, of which $28,475,674,169 was in land. If this capital were mobilized the credit needs of farmers could be supplied for all time to come. The annual returns were $8,417,000,000. This is more than sufficient to finance a banking system for the exclusive use of the farmers. Mobilization can be accomplished, however, only through institutions capable of lengthening the period of loans, allowing repayment by amortization, and able to make heavy and constant sales of debentures issued against the mortgages taken. As regards short-term credit, the best banking system ever devised for enabling farmers to utilize their own funds and revenues for their own purpose is a cooperative system. (Rural Credits, p. 9.)

In addition to a complete and independent cooperative system, there is much to be done to remove the evils of the Federal reserve system.

I have introduced a series of bills to accomplish this purpose. One would prohibit any bank from making a speculative loan in the same terms that the law prohibits the Federal reserve banks from rediscounting such a loan. Why should a speculative loan be outlawed in the reserve bank for rediscount and at the same time legalized as an original loan by the member bank? It should be outlawed all along the line. It is preposterous to claim that the Government of the United States or of the various States should be called upon to furnish a banking system to sustain an institution of stock gamblers.

Another bill would prohibit one ordinary bank from paying another ordinary bank for redeposits and turn this item of reserve-bank business into the reserve banks. It would require the reserve bank to pay 2 per cent interest rate. This would increase the volume of reserve-bank business very greatly. On this increased volume it would never need to charge over 3 per cent on rediscounts and perhaps could make a profit at even a lower rate; so this bill fixes the rediscount rate by law at 3 per cent, and takes away from the Federal Reserve Board the power of affecting prices and business by raising and lowering the discount rate. That is a power too great to be intrusted to any board. The Congress of the United States itself is the only board representing all the people that should exercise such power. The right to do so is as old as the English law. It is simply fixing a usury rate and that has always been done. If the rediscount rate is fixed at 3 per cent, the ordinary bank can lend to farmers, laborers, and ordinary business at 5 per cent, and this bill fixes the general usury rate for loans of that character at 5 per cent. This gives the people the advantage of lowering the general interest rate by efficient use of surplus funds in a reserve banking system.

These provisions have been criticized by the statement that they would drive all the business into the State banks. I have anticipated that argument and offered another bill to require the State banks to comply with the same rules or be denied the use of the United States mails and the privileges of interstate commerce. This would put all the banks under the same system of rules. Unless something of the kind is done we are now headed for the greatest panic in the history of the world. The recent action of the Federal Reserve Board, while in the right direction is powerless to actually stop this fabulous bubble of stock inflation. Perhaps it has gone too far already to be stopped by anything but a panic. In conclusion, I want to ask: Shall the Congress of the United States remain an impotent onlooker in this ruthless destruction of the prosperity of the great masses of our people?

Mr. CAPPER obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CAPPER. I do.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WARREN. I desire to present a conference report. I send it to the desk and move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 10, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 20, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "$123,520"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall certify annually to the Bureau of the Budget, along with his estimates of appropriations for the ensuing year, a statement of the amount of the savings which he estimates have been effected in the various bureaus and offices of the Government, including the District of Columbia, as a result of the surveys and recommendations made by the Bureau of Efficiency in cooperation with the bureau or office involved during the previous fiscal year; and the Bureau of the Budget shall, upon the request of any appropriation committee of the House or Senate, supply such committee with a statement of the reductions or adjustments of appropriations effected or proposed to be made in the appropriations for the respective bureaus or offices as a result of such surveys by the Bureau of Efficiency."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$541,445,740"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
CARTER GLASS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD H. WASON,
JOHN W. SUMMERS,
JOHN C. ALLEN,
THOMAS H. CULLEN,
FRED M. VINSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question in on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, was that the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With all due respect, I ask a reconsideration of the vote by which it was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know why the Senator asks for a reconsideration. I waited all day that he might be here, and of course when the day has been largely spent in waiting I presented the report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There was not a quorum call. I was called out of the Chamber. I have been waiting all day for this report to come before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator did not wait. To accommodate him, I have sat here all day. I assumed, of course, that he was here or had tired and left the Chamber. I did not take any advantage of him. I waited until the Senator who had the floor for some hours had finished his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to be reconsidered. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. All those in favor of a reconsideration will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. We are now voting on the direct question of a reconsideration, so that those in favor of a reconsideration will vote "yea"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRATTON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COPELAND] is detained on official business.

Mr. JONES. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained on official business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 27, as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I would not have asked for a reconsideration of the vote by which the conference report was agreed to if I had not thought that the Senate ought to give some consideration to an item that had been included three times in appropriation bills by the Senate and three times taken out by a conference committee. I do not want to be understood as finding any fault with any of the conferees. However, I think it is only just to say that I think their action has possibly been based upon a lack of information.

When the appropriation bill was before the Senate an amendment was adopted, as follows:

On page 39, line 6, insert the following:

"No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to maintain the Sea Service Bureau."

It is to that item, which has been taken out of the bill by the conference committee that I respectfully call the attention of the Senate and the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate.

It has been claimed that this item must be provided for by special legislation if the Sea Service Bureau is to be abolished. I want to direct attention to the fact that the Sea Service Bureau has never been created by law. It is an outgrowth or remnant of a rule adopted by the Shipping Board in time of war, when they established the so-called recruiting service for the merchant marine.

It has been said that it is necessary to maintain this Sea Service Bureau in order to recruit men for the sea service in Shipping Board vessels and privately owned vessels flying the flag of the United States. I want to point out that they are rendering a service which the law says shall be rendered by shipping commissioners provided for by law, appointed by the Department of Commerce, appropriated for in the regular appropriation bills for the Department of Commerce as provided for by law.

The section of the navigation laws of the United States of 1927 prescribing the duties of shipping commissioners or shipping officers reads as follows:

The general duties of a shipping commissioner shall be:

First. To afford facilities for engaging seamen by keeping a register of their names and characters.

Second. To superintend their engagement and discharge in manner prescribed by law.

Third. To provide means for securing the presence on board at the proper times of men who are so engaged.

Fourth. To facilitate the making of apprenticeships to the sea service.

Fifth. To perform such other duties relating to merchant seamen or merchant ships as are now or may hereafter be required by law.

In any port in which no shipping commissioner shall have been appointed, the whole or any part of the business of a shipping commissioner shall be conducted by the collector or deputy collector of customs of such port, and in respect of such business such customhouse shall be deemed a shipping office, and the collector or deputy collector of customs to whom such business shall be committed shall for all purposes be deemed a shipping commissioner within the meaning of this title.

I might say that these shipping commissioners are in every seaport in the United States where there is shipping.

That is the law defining some of the duties of the shipping commissioners. The law also provides a penalty to be imposed upon any individual who performs the duties conferred upon shipping commissioners, and that is work that is being done by the Sea Service Bureau. This is the penalty:

Any person other than a commissioner under this title who shall perform, or attempt to perform, either directly or indirectly, the duties which are by this title set forth as pertaining to a shipping commissioner, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $500.

So here we have an employment agency provided by law, appropriated for properly by law, and administered according to law. In addition to the shipping commissioners the Government of the United States, through the Department of Labor, operates something like 205 employment agencies in 176 cities of the United States. So, if the charge is made that the shipping commissioners provided by law, whose business it is to recruit men for the sea service, can not do all of this work, we have already another governmental agency, as I have said, operating 205 employment offices in 176 cities, which can aid the shipping commissioners in this recruiting service.

However, if that were the only work and the only purpose of the Sea Service Bureau, they would automatically be deprived by law of that duty. The laws of the United States provide a penalty for any person other than a shipping commissioner performing this service. This service bureau has had other functions to perform.

I have here a statement that has been sent out—I am not sure whether by the Shipping Board or by the Sea Service Bureau—stating how it was created. It says:

The recruiting service of the United States Shipping Board was authorized by the United States Shipping Board on May 29, 1917.

The purpose of this service was to recruit and train deck officers, engineers, seamen, firemen, cooks, and messmen to constitute all-American crews for the rapidly growing American merchant marine.

Later we find this paragraph:

With the increasing number of graduates from the recruiting service training schools and ships the United States Shipping Board decided that it was necessary to establish a bureau to place these graduates, and on July 8, 1917, authorization was given by the United States Shipping Board to establish a department whose functions are indicated by its title, the Sea Service Bureau.

That is how it was created. In the seventh paragraph of this report we find this:

Shortly after the armistice was signed the work of the recruiting service was gradually eliminated, the schools were closed and the training program aboard training ship was abandoned, but the work of the Sea Service Bureau was just as important after the signing of the armistice, as the United States Shipping Board vessels were in operation and had to be supplied with competent crews.

That is the excuse given for the continuance of the Sea Service Bureau. In other words, by consent of the Shipping Board, the work of this bureau was continued.

I find from this report that one of the important duties of the Sea Service Bureau is to keep what is called a deferred list of men who make their living at sea. It is called the "deferred list"; in the parlance of the street it is called the "black list." In the last paragraph of this report, which is dated January 25, 1928, I find this:

> We have on our deferred list at the present time 1,125 seamen whose names appear there on account of being physically unfit for sea duty, and 1,885 seamen who have been placed there for various offenses such as putting emery in the bearings, assaulting officers with intent to kill, stealing ships' property, smuggling, desertion, and incompetency. To let these men go unpunished would be a detriment to our effort to build up an efficient and loyal personnel on our merchant ships.

Here we find that the Sea Service Bureau has taken upon itself the duty of punishing men who have assaulted officers with intent to kill, stolen ships' property, smuggled, deserted, or shown themselves to be incompetent, by putting them on the deferred list. They are, then, performing the duty of courts of the United States. That duty has been conferred upon the courts by acts of Congress. Penalties are prescribed for these offenses, and the Criminal Code prescribes how men who commit these crimes shall be punished. The law does not say it is within the duty or province of the Sea Service Bureau to punish these men. The Shipping Board's own report shows that instead of going to the courts to punish them, they put them on a black list.

Section 294 of chapter 12 of the Criminal Code of the United States provides:

> Whoever, being a seaman, lays violent hands upon his commander, thereby to hinder and prevent his fighting in defense of his vessel or the goods intrusted to him, is a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.

I submit, Mr. President, that when men commit crimes like that, it is the duty of the master of the vessel on which they happen to be, or the shipping commissioner, or any other individual, to see that the law takes its course and that the men get the punishment prescribed by law.

Section 301 of the same code provides:

> Whoever, not being an owner, upon the high seas or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, willfully and corruptly casts away or otherwise destroys any vessel of the United States to which he belongs, or, willfully, with intent to destroy the same, sets fire to any such vessel, or otherwise attempts the destruction thereof, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years.

It has been claimed that another duty of the Sea Service Bureau is to induce American citizens to go to sea, and so improve the service; and they claim that they have done that.

They are supposed to have been rendering the service which Captain Fried said was so important. He said the trouble with the American merchant marine is that they do not get the right kind of men to go to sea. I submit that the history of the Sea Service Bureau shows why so many American citizens will not go to sea.

In order that Senators may know how successfully their recruiting of American citizens has been, I desire to read some figures from a report issued by the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island, dated January 7, 1929. On the first of the last three trips of the steamer Leviathan there were 495 aliens and 538 American citizens employed. On the second of the last three trips there were 462 aliens and 529 American citizens. On the last of the three last trips before this report was made there were 453 aliens and 537 American citizens. In this era of unemployment in the United States American citizens can not get work.

On the President Roosevelt there were 90 aliens on the first of the last three trips made before this report was rendered, and 143 American citizens in the crew. On the second of the last three trips she carried 98 aliens and 126 American citizens, and on the last of the three trips 91 aliens and 133 American citizens.

On the President Harding on the first of the last three trips made before the report was rendered there were 90 aliens and 132 American citizens. On the second of the last three trips there were 91 aliens and 131 American citizens. On the third of the last three trips before this report there were 84 aliens and 137 American citizens.

The steamer America, the boat which saved the officers and crew of the Florida, on the last two trips prior to the rendering of this report, carried 305 aliens and 231 American citizens and 261 aliens and 208 American citizens, respectively.

The George Washington, on the first of the last three trips before this report, carried 410 aliens and 219 American citizens. On the second of the three trips referred to she carried 409 aliens and 223 American citizens. On the last of the three trips she carried 297 aliens and 202 American citizens.

Mr. President, if the Senate will permit me, I want to go back to the black list. I have here an original letter signed with the original signature of the assistant director of the recruiting service of the Sea Service Bureau, "E. D. Warner, United States Shipping Board, interoffice memorandum, dated June 8, 1921," and reading as follows:

> From E. D. Warner, assistant director recruiting service.
> To all agents and subagents, Sea Service Bureau.
> Subject: J. Slatgher, oiler, steamship Ripon.
>
> This is to advise you that J. Slatgher, late oiler of steamship Ripon, is not again to be employed upon Shipping Board vessels.
> E. D. Warner.

I have here another letter signed by W. P. Seymour, assistant to the director of industrial relations in charge of recruiting service, dated December 17, 1925. The letterhead is that of the United States Shipping Board at Washington. This is directed to Mr. Andrew Furuseth, president International Seamen's Union, Washington, D. C., and reads:

> Dear Sir: Replying to yours of the 15th instant, inclosing a letter from Mr. Rammussen, of New York, I am glad to advise that Mr. John Olson's name has been removed from our deferred list on the 15th instant and Mr. Rammussen was notified to this effect.

Here is an official notification that his name has been taken from the black list.

I have here a copy of a letter from the port captain, Mr. Nicholson, of Mobile, Ala.:

> To All Masters:
>
> It is requested that in the future if you have any trouble with your crew or if you find any agitators amongst them, please submit full report to this office, to enable us to place any trouble makers or undesirable on the black list. It is also requested that extreme care should be taken in marking crew discharges upon completion of the voyage. If any member of the crew violate any of the rules of your vessel, you will see that he is given a poor discharge.
>
> Yours very truly,

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bratton in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Would it disturb the Senator if I asked him a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Am I to understand the Senator's position to be that this service set up by the Shipping Board is performing duties which the law casts on the shipping commissioners?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Wherefore the argument is that they are performing duties in direct violation of the statute in respect of the shipping commissioners?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is correct. The Senator evidently was not here when I began my remarks. I read the statute describing the duties of the shipping commissioners.

To show what the courts of the United States think of the black list, let me read an item from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of December 18, 1925. A man was blacklisted and sued the steamship company for damages. The court awarded him damages. Here is a newspaper report of the case headed—

> Blacklisted man wins out.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The suit was brought against a private corporation?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

> Portland, Oreg., December 17, 1925.—That Ralph Johnson, longshoreman, had suffered damages as the result of a conspiracy among eight employers along the water front to prevent his employment, was the jury's interpretation of his complaint, tried in Circuit Judge L. P. Hewitt's court. A verdict to-day awarded Johnson $4,500.
>
> The suit alleged conspiracy among employers on the water front to blacklist any man discharged by any other employer and to keep his name off the list used at the hiring hall.
> When originally filed, the suit named some 30 firms as defendants, but motions of nonsuit were granted all except the Oregon Stevedoring Co., the Pacific Steamship Co., the McCormick Steamship Co., the Lukenbach Steamship Co., the W. J. Jones & Sons, stevedores; Brown & McCabe, Kerr, Gifford & Co., and Balfour Guthrie & Co.

I read that to show what the courts of the United States think of the black list. That the Government of the United States should appropriate money out of the Public Treasury to support an organization which by its own statement admits that it has a list of men and sends that list out to the shipping commissioners, sea-service agents, the agencies of the organization, telling them not to hire the men on that list, seems to me an unusual procedure for the Government of the United States to pursue.

I am quite confident the conferees did not have all this information when they permitted this provision to be taken out of the bill. I hope that they will go back into conference and insist, upon the part of the Senate, that the provision which was placed in the bill by the Senate on three different occasions and thrown out in conference shall remain in the present bill, and that they will be able to get the conferees to agree to remove this accretion, this appendix, and that is what it is, which has grown up as the result of a very useful service that was rendered during the war, but in time of peace the Congress of the United States has provided other ways for performing the service.

I have here a list of the appropriations that are made through the Department of Commerce appropriation bill for the maintenance of the shipping commissioners who are to do this work. They totaled $304,840, being segregated as follows: In the District of Columbia, $73,440; measurement of vessels, $5,600; enforcement of navigation laws, $92,320; preventing overcrowding of passenger vessels, $18,840; clerk hire, $105,860; contingent expenses, $10,780.

I submit, Mr. President, that if this work can not all be done by the shipping commissioners the law ought to be amended removing the penalty which it is prescribed shall be imposed upon any other individual who performs that service, and we can so amend the law that the 205 Federal employment offices in the United States can do the recruiting service of the Shipping Board for the American merchant marine. It has been claimed that the Sea Service Bureau trains seamen to go to sea. If there is anyone who can show me that they are training any seamen I shall be very glad to have the information. The laws of the United States prescribe that the shipping commissioners shall prescribe the facilities for seamen apprentices to learn the seafaring trade.

Mr. President, with all due respect to the chairman of the conferees and his fellow conferees, I move that the bill be sent back to conference and that the Senate conferees be instructed——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the motion is not necessary. The question comes on the adoption or rejection of the report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I stand corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] has asked me to read the item. I have the amendment here, I can not find it, but the essence of the amendment adopted by the Senate provides that none of these funds shall be used to maintain the Sea Service Bureau. Now, I yield to the Senator from Utah if he desires to ask me a question.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I wish to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as the Senator from Minnesota has said, this is the third time that the Senate has accepted this amendment on the appropriation bill, but it has always been accepted with the statement that it would be taken to conference and if the conferees on the part of the House would agree to it the conferees on the part of the Senate would be perfectly willing to have it remain in the bill, although I have often said—and I repeat—this is not the way to reach the object sought. If there is a desire to make a change in the law, a bill for that purpose should be introduced and considered and acted upon. In that proper legislative way any change desired in the program could be brought about.

The Senator must know that the shipping commissioners can not do the work performed by the Sea Service Bureau. They have to have an agency to perform the work, and if the Sea Service Bureau were now abolished there would be nothing to take its place, and, so far as that activity is concerned, we would be at sea.

If the Senator and those who believe with him desire a change brought about the proper way to proceed, as I have said, is to introduce a bill, setting forth the changes to be made, and affording ample time so that there may be no interference at all with the selection of seamen.

As to whether what the amendment proposes is the proper thing to do I would perhaps agree after studying the whole question—and I am going to study it—agree that it is. I have told the friend who brought the information to the Senator from Minnesota and who has also talked to me about it that before the next appropriation bill for this purpose shall be considered, if it is desired that something be done about this matter, a bill should be introduced either here or in the House, but preferably in the Senate, so that the question may be thoroughly threshed out and the terms of the bill itself may specifically provide the duties which shall be performed by each agency, and also provide the amount of money which shall be expended for the service and let the appropriation go directly to that service. To adopt the course proposed by the Senator from Minnesota would result in confusion. Only this morning I was talking to the friend to whom reference has been made along the same line, and I told him that is what ought to be done. I think it is the only proper way to reach the object sought to be attained, rather than to adopt the amendment now and to abolish the Sea Service Bureau without providing anything to take its place. I hope that the Senate will act along that line.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Even if we should take the action proposed, the present appropriation would be effective until the 1st of July, and the bureau would be able to operate until that time.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. So that they would have all the time between now and the 1st of July in which to readjust their employment service.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt whether that could be done. They would not know exactly what character of legislation would be enacted; they would not know what the provisions of the law would be, and there would be involved the need of adjusting matters in the meantime and perhaps readjusting it subsequently.

Mr. COUZENS. Is it not true that the statute already provides that the shipping commissioners must do this work?

Mr. SMOOT. They are doing it indirectly now.

Mr. COUZENS. They can continue to do it directly by other means than the present seamen's bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt if anything would be gained by that.

Mr. COUZENS. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the conference report ought to be agreed to, and then in the meantime Senators who are interested in the question can prepare a bill definitely setting forth just what is desired that the commissioners shall do and provide means directly for that work.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The law already so provides.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the law says.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator was not here when I read the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the law is. It confers the power upon the commissioners. I would go further; I would say exactly what their duties under the law shall be, and then there could not be any evasion of it, if it can be said that there is any evasion now. In my opinion, they are simply performing through an agency the work that Congress intended that they should perform.

Mr. COUZENS. There is no provision in the law for them to turn over that duty to some other bureau or agency.

Mr. SMOOT. In the appropriations which we enact for the support of various commissions we do not specify the duties of all the employees under those commissions. We never have done that in any legislation. In this particular case, however, I am perfectly willing to see it done; and I will support legislation that will go so far as to provide just what the duties shall be and specify them by law. I think that is the proper way to proceed in this instance.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Utah, I do not see how we can abolish by law an office that has not been created by law. If this bureau had been created by definite legislative enactment, we could remedy the situation by repealing that law; but the only way we can eliminate this duplication of service is by specifically prohibiting by law the use of the funds to carry on the services of this organization.

As a matter of fact, when the La Follette Seaman's Act was passed, a specific provision of that law put the so-called "crimp" out of business. It was intended that he should be put out of business by law. He was performing the service which the law said shall be performed by the shipping commissioners; but by a simple ruling the Shipping Board there has been created an organization that has taken the place of the "crimp."

Mr. WARREN. Of what?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of the "crimp."

Mr. WARREN. How does the Senator make that out?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Before the passage of the seaman's act certain individuals who had offices around shipping centers in various ports would hire seamen for masters of vessels. The law provides that masters of vessels may hire the crew. So there is plenty of opportunity for men to go to sea and obtain employment at sea without maintaining an organization that is operating contrary to law and performing duties that the law says shall be performed by other officers.

Mr. WARREN. If the law is being continuously broken, why does not the Government through its proper officers prosecute those who may be violating the law?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not know. Does the Senator refer to men who violate the Criminal Code of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. I refer to anyone who may break the law. Violators of the law are open to prosecution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I read the provisions of the Penal Code and the penalty which the law says shall be visited on those who perform the duties which under the law are required to be performed by the shipping commissioners. Why that law is not enforced I do not know.

Mr. WARREN. It is rather singular that a law would be continuously disobeyed for years.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is not the only law that is disobeyed. What I am trying to do is to stop the appropriation under which the violation of the law occurs.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the Senator wants to stop entirely the appropriation of approximately $550,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. That amount, approximately, is carried by the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator does me an injustice. I am not trying to do that. I thought I was following the usual procedure prescribed by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I assumed I was speaking within my rights.

Mr. WARREN. Nobody is objecting to the Senator's doing so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I assumed I was proceeding in a perfectly regular way under the rules. It is not my intention to act in any other manner. I am sure the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension if he thinks I have any intention of jeopardizing the passage of the bill. I have no such intention at all.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator has finished, let me say that this is a matter affecting the ships owned by the Government which are under the guidance and management of the Shipping Board. According to the reports which come to me, the Shipping Board is doing its duty. On the routes established the Shipping Board is running vessels to points all over the world. Those ships cost many thousands of dollars a day to operate, and when a ship is going to some far-away port of the world the Shipping Board can hardly afford to delay obtaining men to operate them.

Mr. President, on account of my physical condition at present—of my throat—I am not able to say very much, but I think this service is now being conducted in a manner that is perfectly legitimate. I ask to have read the statement which I send to the desk in order that Senators may benefit from the information contained therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, February 5, 1929.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reference to H. R. 16301, independent offices appropriation bill, which is now in conference, carrying amendment by Senator SHIPSTEAD, as follows:

Page 39, line 6, insert the following: "No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to maintain the Sea Service Bureau."

I beg to inclose herewith statements giving complete information on the activities of our Sea Service Bureau. Such information is ample proof that we must maintain a Sea Service Bureau if we are going to have an efficient American personnel on our ships.

If there is any further information that you desire, let me know by telephone or otherwise and I will see that it is promptly furnished.

Yours very truly,

T. V. O'CONNOR, Chairman.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD SEA SERVICE BUREAU

The sea-service section of the United States Shipping Board is not doing the work that is assigned by law to the United States Shipping Commissioners of the Department of Commerce; nor is there a duplication of work.

The United States Shipping Commissioners are appointed by an act of Congress to supervise the engagement and proper treatment of seamen in the merchant service and to enforce laws for the seamen's protection. They attend to the signing of the ships' articles, which is a legal instrument in writing, specifying the terms of the contract between the owners and the seamen who ship aboard a vessel. They also attend to the discharge of the seamen and the payment of their wages when the contract has been fulfilled.

The sea-service section does not infringe upon nor duplicate in any way the above duties of the United States Shipping Commissioners. It is the specialized duty of the sea-service section to supply competent American seamen who are physically fit to man our ships. A sea-service office is maintained at the various ports and is a place where the men may wait until assigned to a ship. In the sea-service office the men do not register, nor are they shipped in turn, but rather the American seamen holding the best discharges from previous ships, and physically qualified, are given the preference. By physically qualified is meant that each seaman must pass a physical examination prior to being placed aboard ship.

A complete record is kept of each seaman shipped. Such record will show the seaman's name, address, nationality, next of kin, conduct, character, ability, and physical condition, and a complete record of his previous service.

The sea-service section makes no discrimination against the seaman on account of affiliation or nonaffiliation with any labor organization. It makes no regulations governing the work of seamen. It carries out a policy not to employ a seaman who has caused trouble and expense to our ships in foreign ports, for example, by being absent without leave, failure to join the ship, disobedience of orders at sea, destroying ship's property, or smuggling. It is necessary in the interest of an efficient merchant marine to take some disciplinary action when a seaman is guilty of the above offenses, consequently he is in some cases denied employment on our vessels.

In the manning of vessels of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, the following order of preference is carried out:

DECK AND ENGINE DEPARTMENTS

1. American citizens.
2. Natives of the Philippine Islands. (To be given preference in employment next to American citizens, by reason of owing allegiance to the United States Government as guardian of the Philippine Islands.)
3. Aliens holding "intention" papers. (Failure of aliens who declare their intentions to become citizens to acquire full citizenship as soon as entitled to same under the law, will place such aliens in the fourth class.)
4. Aliens eligible to citizenship.

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT

1. Chief stewards should be American citizens, whenever practicable.
2. American citizens should be employed wherever practicable, Filipinos next in order of preference.
3. Other members of the steward's department to be selected to best meet the requirements of the particular service in which the vessel is engaged.

The abolishment of the sea-service section would effect no saving in appropriations, as a similar activity would have to be carried on, and would probably be handled with the same organization as the sea-service section now has, and the same amount of money would necessarily be expended in carrying on the work.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Sea Service Bureau.

SEAMEN ON SHIPPING BOARD VESSELS

It has been unjustly charged that the seamen employed on Shipping Board vessels are incompetent.

Your attention is drawn to the record of the crews of Shipping Board vessels who have made heroic rescues at sea. These crews were all supplied by the sea-service section of the Shipping Board.

It is obviously unfair to the gallant American seamen employed on these ships to attempt to minimize their efficiency by making statements that they are incompetent, after they have proved to the world that they are not only equal to but are even more efficient than foreign seamen, especially when foreign nations have recognized their heroic conduct, devotion to duty, and valor under the most trying conditions in the following well-known disasters at sea:

Rescue of the crew of the American schooner Jas. W. M. Hall, on December 7, 1928, by the steamship West Ekonk.

Steamship West Ekonk, 100 per cent American crew.

The latest chapter in this splendid list of rescues was enacted on January 23, 1929, when, in a boisterous sea, 700 miles from shore, 32 members of the crew of the Italian freighter Florida were saved from a watery grave by the United States Shipping Board steamship America, under Capt. George Fried. Of the 79 sailors in the America's deck department, 76 were American citizens and the remaining 3 had taken out their first papers. The lifeboat crew which performed this heroic feat were all American citizens, placed aboard the ship by the sea-service section of the Shipping Board.

The above record speaks for itself and should definitely silence those who seek to impeach the efficiency and gallantry of American seamen placed on Shipping Board vessels by the sea-service section.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Sea Service Section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the figures that I gave on citizenship of crews employed were furnished by the immigration commissioner. The figures just read were given by the Shipping Board.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does the Senator doubt the accuracy of this report?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; I do not doubt it.

I observe that the Shipping Board refer to the employees as deck hands. There are other employees than deck hands. The immigration commissioner gives the figures of the entire crew.

Mr. WARREN. I will wait for the Senator to finish.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator. I do not want to delay him unnecessarily.

The report of the Shipping Board just read states, among other things, that one of the chief duties of the Sea Service Bureau is to see that the papers are properly signed when a seaman is engaged to go to sea. The navigation laws of the United States on that matter say that an agreement containing the following particulars shall be made by the master with the seaman and signed before the shipping commissioner:

First. The nature and, as far as practicable, the duration of the intended voyage or engagement and the port or country at which the voyage is to terminate.

Second. The number and description of the crew, specifying their respective employments.

Third. The time at which each seaman is to be on board to begin work.

Fourth. The capacity in which each seaman is to serve.

Fifth. The amount of wages which each seaman is to receive.

Sixth. A scale of the provisions which are to be furnished to each seaman.

Seventh. Any regulations as to conduct on board and as to fines, short allowances of provisions, or other lawful punishments for misconduct, which may be sanctioned by Congress or authorized by the Secretary of Commerce, not contrary to or not otherwise provided for by law, which the parties agree to adopt.

Eighth. Any stipulations in reference to allotment of wages, or other matters not contrary to law.

The following rules shall be observed with respect to agreements:

First. Every agreement, except such as are otherwise specially provided for, shall be signed by each seaman in the presence of a shipping commissioner.

Second. When the crew is first engaged, the agreement shall be signed in duplicate——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, do I understand that every seaman must sign in the presence of the commissioner? Will the Sentaor please read that language again?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (reading):

When the crew is first engaged, the agreement shall be signed in duplicate, and one part shall be retained by the shipping commissioner and the other part shall contain a special place or form for the description and signatures of persons engaged subsequently to the first departure of the ship, and shall be delivered to the master.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming asked that the Senator from Minnesota read again that part of the statute as to signing in the presence of the commissioner.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It says that the duty of the commissioner——

Mr. WARREN. Yes; of the commissioner. He must be in all of these ports, of course.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Every shipping port has a shipping commissioner.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will the Senator read that portion again?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator evidently thinks I refer to some commissioner down here in Washington. The law provides for numerous shipping commissioners. They are in every port——

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator for the information. I do not wish to discuss the matter.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And where there is no shipping commissioner, the law provides that the customs collector shall perform the duties of the shipping commissioner. After prohibiting any other person from performing the duties of shipping commissioner, there is a qualification as follows:

Nothing in this title, however, shall prevent the owner or consignee or master of any vessel, except vessels bound from a port in the United States to any foreign port, other than vessels engaged in trade between the United States and the British North American possessions, or the West India Islands, or the Republic of Mexico, and vessels of the burden of 75 tons or upward bound from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, from performing himself, so far as his vessel is concerned, the duties of shipping commissioner under this title.

In other words, the master himself has the right under the law to hire his crew.

The shipping laws of the United States provide penalties for men who are guilty of smuggling and of assaulting an officer, and provide that the courts shall prescribe the penalty if the men are found guilty. This Sea Service Bureau takes it upon itself to punish such men. I want to read the penal code from the Navigation Laws of 1917, on page 64:

Sixth. For assaulting any master or mate, by imprisonment for not more than two years.

Eighth. * * * For any act of smuggling for which he is convicted and whereby loss or damage is occasioned to the master or owner, he shall be liable to pay such master or owner such a sum as is sufficient to reimburse the master or owner for such loss or damage, and the whole or any part of his wages may be retained in satisfaction or on account of such liability, and he shall be liable to imprisonment for a period of not more than 12 months.

I ask, Mr. President, that the clerk read a copy of an affidavit signed by an American-born citizen that may throw some light upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., April 22, 1924.

I, H. J. Everitt, born at St. Paul, Minn., on June 14, 1887, shipped on the steamer Hanover (American) at New Orleans as boatswain on or about the 5th of September for a trip to Manila, P. I., and other eastern ports and back to the United States.

At Ilo Ilo, P. I., I got left behind, the ship proceeding to Manila without me. I endeavored to reach the ship there, paying my own passage from Ilo Ilo to Manila, but on reaching there found she had left for the United States.

I thereupon applied to the regular United States shipping commissioner, who supplies men for vessels going to the States and elsewhere with men (seamen), for a chance on board some American vessel in order to get back to my native country, and he said that he would not ship any American seaman on any American ship until all the Filipinos had been shipped out or provided with jobs.

Myself and 29 other American seamen were then forced to apply to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and we were sent as destitute seamen on the U. S. transport Thomas on the 24th of March, 1924, arriving at San Francisco, Calif., on April 21, 1924.

H. J. EVERITT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of April, 1924.

ANNE F. HASTY,
Notary Public, City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

(My commission expires September 20, 1927.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What is the question upon which we are about to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. It is a direct vote on adopting the report of the conference committee, and those in favor of adopting the report will vote in the affirmative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] and vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I have been told that he would vote on this question as I intend to vote, and therefore I vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily detained by official business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are detained on official business. I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], but I am advised that if present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 11, as follows:

SALE OF COTTON AND GRAIN IN FUTURE MARKETS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the measure under discussion, Senate bill 1093, to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets, is regarded by many as an extremely drastic measure. Perhaps it is. But it is designed and drawn to remedy a very serious, and, from an economic viewpoint, a very dangerous situation; I am tempted to say a very wicked situation.

It is that situation, especially as it affects the grain grower, that I propose to discuss for a few minutes. There are others who can speak with much more familiarity of the cotton market situation. I will not attempt to go into that.

The grain market gamblers cost the farmers of my home State of Kansas something like $75,000,000 in three months last summer. Kansans pay less than twice that much in Federal, State, and local taxes during the year. And here in three short months we have the spectacle of grain gamblers on the Chicago Board of Trade mulcting the wheat growers of Kansas of $75,000,000 through a legalized gambling device, in a gambling game in which the wheat grower neither draws cards nor is allowed to shoot dice—he only furnishes stakes in the game, and no matter who among the gamblers wins, the grower loses. It is an economic crime, a business blunder, and legislative inanity, to allow this condition to continue.

Mr. President, here is what happens when the farmers of my State ship a load of wheat to the market. It is placed on the market, and at the same time there is placed another load of fictitious wheat, paper wheat, imaginary wheat, "gamblers' chips" wheat—but this fictitious wheat, this paper wheat, this imaginary wheat, this wheat that consists of the gamblers' chips only, competes with his in the market. Then—and here is the irony of that situation—the law of supply and demand is allowed to work. And it works to the detriment and toward the ruin of the grower.

On that market there is the actual wheat delivered by the grower, wheat that has been produced from the ground, wheat that can be ground into flour and later be baked into bread. But there is also this imaginary wheat, millions and millions of bushels of "paper wheat" that never was produced, never can be ground into flour, never can be baked into bread. But it helps to constitute the "supply" of wheat on that market. Of course, when the supply is made to appear millions and millions of bushels greater than it really is, and the trading is done on the basis of what it appears to be instead of on the basis of what it is, then the inexorable law of supply and demand sends the price tumbling downward.

Mr. President, I am not drawing on my imagination when I state this. It actually happens every year at the time when the wheat grower is marketing his crops.

I could paint another picture. Let me state it differently. I could show another photograph, taken of what actually happens later. After the wheat has passed from the farmers hands, the wheels and pulleys and magnets and other mechanism under the gamblers' table are reversed. In the place of the fictitious supply of wheat, the grain gamblers manipulate the futures market so that there is a fictitious demand for the actual wheat. And again the inexorable law of supply and demand is allowed to work.

The gamblers' dice are loaded both ways. From farm to market the wheat competes with millions of bushels of imaginary wheat and the market is driven downward. Then, as I said before, the wheels and pulleys and magnets and mechanism under the table are reversed. From market to consumer the actual demand for wheat competes with an imaginary supply and the market is forced downward.

It is time that the boards of trade were made to exercise their legitimate function in the marketing of grain and wheat, and not allowed to function largely as a paradise for gamblers and a bottomless pit for producers and consumers.

Mr. President, we may consider the measure now before the Senate a drastic one. It is drastic. But the situation is so serious that it requires a drastic remedy. It is quite probable that the measure now before us goes beyond what is needed. I have introduced a measure, S. 3575, designed to correct the evil without destroying the usefulness of the futures market, which I believe has legitimate functions in marketing. But as my bill has not been placed before the Senate for action, and as I believe action is needed, I intend to support the pending measure. And, Mr. President, I believe it is only fair to state that in my judgment, unless action is taken to place some restriction on the gambling on the boards of trade, we will see such a drastic measure as that proposed in the bill now under consideration enacted into law.

As I said, it is not my intention to discuss what happens to the cotton grower in the cotton market. But before closing these brief remarks it is my intention to cite what happened to the wheat growers of my own State and of the other wheat-growing States on the Chicago Board of Trade last summer.

There was what is known as a "bear raid" on the futures market last May. It should be known as a "bare-faced steal" rather than a "bear raid."

July wheat closed at $1.70½ on April 1. Then the "bear raid" started. In the first three days of May alone in the Chicago market the July futures transaction were respectively 97,400,000 bushels, 90,300,000 bushels, and 93,700,000 bushels, a total for the three days of nearly twice as much as the actual amount of wheat raised last year in Kansas, the premier wheat State.

That trading did not represent trading in actual nor prospective wheat. It was trading in "paper-chips" wheat. But the paper chips were placed in the game as of equal value with the corresponding amount of prospective actual wheat, and the market went down and down and down. The bears were winning. And by the time the actual wheat was on the market the grower found that the gay gamblers had gambled away most of his prospective profits.

Starting at $1.70½ a bushel on April 30, by July 23 the price of July wheat had been hammered down to $1.18½, a loss of 52 cents a bushel, or of nearly $75,000,000 on the 1928 crop to the farmers of Kansas alone.

Naturally the gamblers took advantage of all the technical conditions in the market, especially the ancient stunt of "touching off" stop-loss orders placed behind their orders by the optimistic chaps who were hoping for an advance.

And they made full use, too, of bearish propaganda. Finally there was a thorough "shaking out" of the last of the "longs," who had bought at above $1.30.

Consequently, day after day, the situation was graphically put by the Wall Street Journal. In commenting on one day's operations in the grain pit, that authority said:

> General selling pressure met demoralized buying power.

In other words, there was no actual market.

Mr. President, I am wondering if there is anyone left who will have the hardihood to pull that timeworn shibboleth about the wheat market responding solely to the "law of supply and demand." That explanation had whiskers on it long before the present generation of grain gamblers was born. These whiskers were considerably elongated by the operations of 1928.

What is the use of prattling about the law of supply and demand when a bunch of grain gamblers can create an artificial "supply" of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat overnight and have it counted in the market as an actual 100,000,000 bushels of wheat? And a few months later, when the wheat is out of the growers' hands, can create an artificial "demand" of unnumbered millions of bushels and have that count as an actual demand?

And yet, Mr. President, I have heard it seriously argued that any measures for farm relief should contain a proviso that if there is a surplus beyond domestic demands created, the wheat grower should not be entitled to that relief, because he has created an extra supply.

Our exportable surplus of wheat runs about 200,000,000 bushels annually. The board of trade speculators can create an equal "paper surplus" in less than three days and have it counted on the market as a real surplus.

Mr. President, as I said before, the bill the Senate now is considering may be regarded as drastic. But if the grain growers and the cotton growers do not get some protection against these grain gamblers no measure will be considered too drastic.

There is not, in my opinion, much objection on the part of the wheat growers to ordinary hedging transactions, as in many cases these are of real value to the local elevators that buy the farmers' grain.

But it is time that gamblers should be eliminated from control of the market and futures operations limited to legitimate hedging transactions. That is all that is asked in my own measure, S. 3575, limiting single traders in wheat and corn to 1,000,000 bushels daily. I hope to get action on this bill by this body in the not far distant future.

The farmers are not alone in their demands for protection against the grain gamblers, Mr. President. Next to the farmers, the millers are the most interested in curbing undue speculation in wheat. At their annual convention in Chicago last May the Millers' National Federation adopted the following resolution:

> Whereas the recent vast expansion of trading in wheat futures, with resulting frequent wide fluctuations in prices upon which transactions in actual wheat and its products are based, indicates a renewal of professional speculation similar to that of 1924–25: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the fullest knowledge of daily trading operations and the status of future trading markets being essential to the proper conduct of hedging, we again request the United States Department of Agriculture to publish daily, in segregated form, for each grain and active future, the volume of trading and the open contracts in all contract markets.

Before closing I want to refer back to another actual happening as detailed in an official report. Previously I made reference to what happened last summer. It may be remembered there was a similar happening in 1925. On June 26, 1926, the grain futures administration of the United States Department of Agriculture presented a report to the Senate on wheat-price fluctuations in the early part of 1925. This was in response to Senate Resolution 222, Sixty-ninth Congress, and the report was printed as Senate Document No. 135.

The following brief statement is from the summary and conclusions of the report:

> Most of the wide and erratic price fluctuations that occurred in wheat futures at Chicago during the early part of 1925 were largely artificial and were caused primarily, either directly or indirectly, by heavy trading on the part of a limited number of professional speculators. Some of the speculators, and especially those operating first on one side and then on the other, were able to take advantage of the technical conditions of the market by forcing prices into stop-loss orders or to a point of exhausted margins. These large-scale buying and selling operations completely disrupted the market and resulted in abnormal fluctuations, which were felt in every other large grain market in the world.

The law of supply and demand was not on the job during this period, it seems. But the professional "speculators"—a society term for grain gamblers—were on the job. It will be recalled that the wheat market broke 60 cents a bushel in three months that spring, after a "bull" market—where the law of supply and demand was a joke—the preceding December.

Also, before closing I want to call to your attention the record part of the statement made by Dr. J. W. T. Duvel, chief of the grain futures administration of the Department of Agriculture, before the Texas Grain Dealers' Association at Galveston in May, 1928, relative to the trading in wheat futures on the Chicago Board of Trade:

> During the 2-year period from January, 1925, to December, 1926, there were 71 days on which one or more persons either bought or sold net 2,000,000 bushels or more. In 82 per cent of the cases prices moved in accordance with these heavy purchases or sales. There were several days on which the trading by a single individual amounted to more than 10 per cent of the day's business in the dominant future.
> At one time two traders held over 30 per cent of the aggregate of the open commitments in the dominant future, which at that time was the December. This was at a time when wheat was moving freely from the farms.

You will naturally conclude, as we have always been taught to believe, that these two traders were supporting the market and thereby rendering a valuable service to agriculture and to the grain and milling interests by carrying the weight of the hedges. Unfortunately, however, they were on the short side of the market.

The biggest professional "speculators"—society term for grain gamblers—were on the short side of the market. By their heavy selling they were depressing the price of the farmers' wheat—and Congress has been shaking a puzzled head over farm relief and the problem of the exportable surplus. Here we have a "paper surplus" many times larger throughout the year than the actual exportable surplus and exercising a controlling effect on the market.

Mr. President, the producers have appealed time and again to those in control of the grain exchanges to eliminate these evils, but they continue to ignore our demands for markets honestly and fairly conducted. I insist, therefore, that it is the duty of Congress, the plain and urgent duty of Congress, to relieve the grain and cotton growers of the deadweight of the uncontrolled gambling in futures. We should have honest, free, and open markets subject to the laws of supply and demand. It should be made unlawful for the speculators who grow rich by gambling in mythical contracts affecting farm products and foodstuffs to sell grain or cotton which they do not possess, have no prospects of possession, which they do not intend to deliver and can not be made to deliver. They are trading in contracts that can not be enforced when they sell short. It means inadequate returns to the farmer for his products while the consumers pay higher prices for their foodstuffs.

As the farmers, through the Department of Agriculture information services, through the increasing knowledge of markets and world market conditions they obtain through these services, by reading the bulletins, by reading the market pages, by radio, by increasing general education, become thoroughly familiar with the bunco game that has been and is being worked on them, I for one would not blame them if they revolt instead of merely complain and grumble.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for the pending measure by Mr. CARAWAY, although frankly I admit it probably goes further than is either necessary or wise. But until we get a square deal in the big grain markets I shall vote for every measure which seems to me headed in the right direction toward controlling trading in futures or proposes to eliminate this reckless orgy of gambling in the necessities of life. This is farm relief of the most practical character.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this a matter of such far-reaching importance and fraught with such consequences that I do not think we are prepared, at least I am not prepared, to take immediate action. I am not prepared this afternoon to discuss the matter as I hope to have the privilege of discussing it before we shall finally dispose of it.

But in view of what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has said about unlimited speculation, I want to ask him if he does not think, in the present comparatively helpless condition in which the wheat grower and cotton grower finds himself as to having any voice at all in the fixing of the price of the thing he sells, that if the grain market as now constituted and the cotton market as now constituted were regulated as nearly as may be to prevent the effect of purely artificial purchase and sale, would not that be better than to restrict the grain grower and the cotton grower to the miller of wheat and the manufacturer of cotton?

When I take the floor in my own time I shall attempt to describe the hedging feature as I have known it in the cotton market, and the purchase and the sale of such contracts as affect the welfare of the grower; but I am asking the Senator from Kansas if he does not believe that within certain bounds the carrying of hedges, the price of which in the case of wheat is guaranteed by the board of trade, as I understand, and by the cotton exchange in the case of cotton, is an absolute benefit to the wheat grower and the cotton grower?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that some system of regulation could be adopted that would greatly improve the present system. However, I can not get it out of my mind that the whole future-trading program is based on a false premise; that it is not sound at bottom.

Mr. SMITH. It would be on a false premise if the producers of our staple crops in this country were not on an uneconomic basis fundamentally. I presume the majority of the wheat growers in the West, like our cotton growers, have got to sell; they have no voice in the market; and the ultimate handler of the product is the miller at home or abroad. That is also true as to cotton. It stands to reason that if we pit the unorganized farmers against the organized millers and manufacturers and give the farmer no recourse but to sell to the latter, we have put them at the mercy of those who always want to pay the very lowest possible price for the product they purchase.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. At the present time the farmer is not only pitted against the organized millers and others but he is also pitted against the organized gamblers who manipulate the market.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from North Dakota has made a statement that perhaps involves the very essence of this discussion. He knows that the speculator—let us call him that——

Mr. CARAWAY. The gambler; let us call him that.

Mr. SMITH. I will use my own terminology for the present. Senators know that the element of profit is the thing that causes me as a farmer to make the cotton; it is the element of profit—the hope for profit—that causes the mill to buy my cotton; and it is the same urge that causes the man to sell who has it or the man to buy who has not got it.

Let me use an illustration. Let us say that the mills have a 30 or 60 day supply of cotton. I have some cotton to sell. The mills, however, do not care to buy. Cotton is traded in on the New York Cotton Exchange or the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. If I am shut out from the market, I go to the bank to borrow. The bank will only lend a certain percentage of the value of the cotton, subject to the fluctuations that are incident to all kinds of trading which is not managed by an individual or a monopoly.

A broker comes in and says, "You have a thousand bales of cotton to sell?" "Yes." "I have an order from the mill; I myself have no use for the cotton; but I can sell a thousand bales right now," let us say at 20 cents a pound, basis middling New York. Mark you, the board of trade in Chicago and the New York Cotton Exchange guarantee that price on the day of the maturity of the contract. I may sell for immediate delivery or for the delivery month, which at the present time would be May. Let us see what happens: The broker takes that contract for 1,000 bales, basis middling, at 20 cents a pound, to the bank. The bank recognizes that there is an obligation on the part of the exchange at the maturity of that contract to take that cotton at that price if it shall be tendered and to guarantee that price, to insure that price.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. Let me complete this statement. The broker comes to me and says, "I will give you $100,000 for your thousand bales of cotton." The bank immediately advances the $100,000, less the interest. That cotton is stored. If it goes to 25 cents a pound, the one holding the contract can ship it at maturity at 20 cents and collect the difference; if it drops to 19 cents, he is guaranteed a price of 20 cents. The man who bought that cotton in New York, however, may never see a bale of it; he may have bought it purely as a temporary investment.

Mr. WHEELER. As a speculation.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator may call it what he pleases; but the broker has given me actual cash and has given me a market for that number of bales of cotton for which the price was guaranteed, regardless of the mills or anybody else. There are hundreds of such brokers scattered throughout the country, and believing that cotton or wheat is intrinsically worth the price at which it is quoted on the board they purchase it or sell it, and give me, the farmer, who has no power, who has no resource, a market for my product during 365 years in the year.

I grant that the element of gambling and speculation have heretofore been rife in the cotton exchanges just as was the case on the New York Stock Market.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to carry this thought out. The only concern that I have in all this matter is this: I recognize that the fundamental difficulty with agriculture is that it has no reserve fund.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator mean by that that the farmer can not borrow money on the cotton when he holds it himself?

Mr. SMITH. He can borrow a certain amount, but he is guaranteed nothing. He can borrow within 50 or 60 per cent of its normal value. However, that is not the point I am making.

Mr. BROOKHART. But how much can the speculator or gambler borrow under the plan the Senator has just outlined?

Mr. SMITH. He does not have to borrow anything. He sells on the exchange and the price is guaranteed for the given day.

Mr. BROOKHART. Somebody who buys it has to borrow something, and how much can he borrow? Somebody has got to have some money somewhere along the line.

Mr. SMITH. It is the same as when an owner insures his house; he can borrow the full amount of the insurance. I am talking about insuring the price on a given day.

Mr. BROOKHART. The farmer can only get 50 or 60 per cent, but the gambler of Wall Street can get 100 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. If the farmer were as conversant with hedging as is the ordinary broker and made sufficient cotton to fill a contract he could protect his sale at every hour if he was willing to take the current price, but he is not in the position to do that. Some of them only make 2 bales; others of them only make 10.

Mr. BROOKHART. It looks to me as if the Senator were describing a first-class conspiracy between the miller and the broker and the banker and the whole outfit to rob the farmer.

Mr. SMITH. I am not describing any conspiracy amongst any group of men. I am taking an actual condition that exists. I who make my living out of the cotton field have no interest so far as cotton is concerned except in trying to get something approximating its value, and I know——

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator claim that he has got anything approximating the value through the cotton exchange sales which he has described? Does the Senator claim that he has had that in the past?

Mr. SMITH. It is the only influence, the only power that I know of——

Mr. BROOKHART. I am asking has the Senator actually got anything like the value of which he has been speaking?

Mr. SMITH. I think I have gotten more out of it than I would had I been restricted to sell my product to the man who manufactures it.

Mr. BROOKHART. But still the Senator does not say he has obtained the value out of it that he was entitled to receive.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think I have, but I know I would have obtained a plagued sight less if I had been restricted to the man who manufactures it, because the man who buys my cotton buys it in the hope that the price may go up, and when he has bought a certain amount he is using his influence to put it up, and every man who has any to sell gets the advantage, but when the producers are restricted in their sales to the combined manufacturers, who are small in number, those producers, disorganized, without any reserve fund back of them, are at the mercy of the purchasers. The manufacturers buy the cotton when they please, at the price which they please to pay, and no one intervenes between them and the helpless farmer.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that certain abuses which were complained of relative to the New York Cotton Exchange, particularly, have been corrected, so that the complaints which were made in the past are now largely obsolete?

Mr. SMITH. They have of late instituted reforms. I might as well state here and now, Mr. President, as I have stated elsewhere, that we had an investigation last year that lasted for approximately 90 days. In that investigation it was made manifest that there were certain abuses which have been recited in part by the Senator from Kansas.

In my opinion, we exhausted all the facts; the abuses were pointed out, and a bill was drafted which, according to the growers of cotton, the mill people, and all those interested in cotton, practically provided remedies for the evils which were manifest. In the interim between the adjournment of the last session of Congress and the meeting of the present session the New York Cotton Exchange, of their own motion, adopted practically every single one of those reforms which we stated were essential, to wit, that there should be a restriction of the amount of cotton purchased or sold in any one month—and that was easily worked out according to the law of averages—that would approximate about the number of hedges which would be essential to take care of and distribute the load of cotton as it came in, that there should not be transferred from one month to another month certain holdings for the purpose of artificially affecting the market——

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator will yield I wish to find out something more about this hedging business. Let us take an illustration of just how it is done. Suppose the Senator had a thousand bales of cotton; how would he operate to hedge on that?

Mr. SMITH. So far as hedging is concerned, a hedge is where a mill has an order for a certain amount of goods and notifies its broker that it will take so many bales in a given month to fill that order. The broker immediately, let us say, buys a contract for that amount of cotton. He is not going to take up the cotton on the exchange, but he wants to insure that price that day.

Let us say that cotton that day is 20 cents a pound, and he buys that contract.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does he put up the whole value, or just a margin?

Mr. SMITH. Let us see what he does. The Senator has asked about a hedge, and I want to show him what he does.

Mr. BROOKHART. All right.

Mr. SMITH. He buys a contract for a thousand bales of cotton, let us say. He buys it at 20 cents a pound. When the time comes for him to buy the actual spots, cotton has gone up to 21 cents a pound. He has bought at 20. If New York, or the market, or the broker that has sold him, or the speculator or gambler or whatever you call him, were forced to deliver that cotton, he would have to pay 21 cents for it, because he bought it at 20 cents, and cotton has gone to 21; and if he were forced to specific fulfillment of the contract he would have to pay 21.

Mr. BROOKHART. He would have to go out and buy the cotton at 21 cents?

Mr. SMITH. At 21 cents; but what he does is to say to the man who bought the contract, "You go out in the market and buy it at 21 cents a pound. I will give you the difference between 20 and 21, which is $5 a bale." He just sends in that amount, and he pays the contract, furnishes the money up to 21 cents.

Mr. BROOOKHART. Suppose cotton goes down?

Mr. SMITH. All right; if cotton goes down, the man who bought it at 20 cents now gets it at 19 cents. He is due $5 a bale to the fellow to whom he sold it at 20 cents; but he gets it $5 a bale cheaper. The mill gives him 20 cents, and that is $5 a bale more than he had to pay for it; so he takes that $5 and sends it to the broker, and the thing is canceled. So if it goes up, the other fellow pays him. The mill pays him 20 cents, because the mill is obligated to take it at 20 cents. The mill takes it at 20 cents; he had to pay 21, but the broker that sold it to him has to make good the $5. If it goes down to 19, the mill gives him 20; he gave only 19 for it, and he is protected.

Mr. BROOKHART. How much did he put up—what proportion of the amount?

Mr. SMITH. The mill put it all up. The mill buys the cotton.

Mr. BROOKHART. The mill does not buy any cotton until it is ready to use it.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no; but he has insured the price to the day of purchase. Then the mill furnishes him $100 a bale.

Mr. BROOKHART. How much would he put up on a bale of cotton? Let us take one bale.

Mr. SMITH. Why, when he buys the contract he simply pays the brokerage fees; and he may be called upon in the meantime to put up what they call a margin. That is, if it goes down a cent a pound, he just puts up that much. If he has bought the cotton, and it goes up, he does not put up anything; the other fellow puts it up; but if it goes down he puts up, because he will have to make the difference good; but when the mill buys at 20 cents the mill has given him $5 more than he had to pay for the cotton.

Mr. BROOKHART. But the mill will buy at the lower price.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. BROOKHART. It will not pay the higher price if cotton has gone down.

Mr. SMITH. I see that the Senator does not understand hedging.

Mr. BROOKHART. I certainly do not.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator must assume that he is incapable of doing what a thousand others have done, and I know he does not want to do that; and he can not laugh away a fact.

A mill man says to me, "I want a thousand bales of cotton. What is the market to-day?" I say, "Twenty cents a pound." "All right," he says; "book me for October at 20 cents a pound." I immediately purchase in New York a contract for a thousand bales of cotton at 20 cents a pound. The mill man says, "When you come to deliver the cotton I will pay you 20 cents a pound." In the meantime, cotton has gone up to 21 cents.

Mr. BROOKHART. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. SMITH. All right. No money at all has changed hands yet. It is not necessary because I have simply got an option, and it is up to me to fill it. The mill is going to give me 20 cents.

If cotton goes down to 19 cents a pound, I can go out and buy it at 19. I am due New York, or the broker that sold it to me, $5; but the mill gives me the $5, because I have bought it at 19 and delivered it to the mill at 20, and I take the extra $5 and send it to my broker.

On the other hand, if it goes up, he is due me $5, for he said he would deliver to me at 20 cents, and I go out on the market and buy it at 21 cents, and he makes good the $5; so that the 20 cents is hedged, guaranteed.

Mr. BROOKHART. As the Senator figures that out, it is "heads I win and tails you lose"?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no! Nobody loses at all except the man that took the option, the broker, or me.

Mr. BROOKHART. I see that the Senator has figured it all out from the standpoint of the millman and not from the standpoint of the farmer at all.

Mr. SMITH. I am figuring it out from the standpoint of the farmer when the millman comes to buy my cotton. How in the name of heaven could he come and buy my cotton to-day if he could not fix and guarantee the price?

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator says——

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator this question, since he seems to know all about it: Would he go on the open market and buy cotton to-day at 20 cents or wheat at $1.50 a bushel if he did not own it at the time and obligate himself to deliver it three or four months from now?

Mr. BROOKHART. If I had wheat to sell, I would agree to do it; but you could not get me on that gambler's market.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator what would happen to the small flour-mill man, the man who mills only a hundred barrels of flour a day or 200 barrels of flour a day, if he were not permitted to hedge?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I really believe that under the present conditions of the millman and the farmer if you destroyed the power to hedge, the power to guarantee the price——

Mr. BROOKHART. I would not destroy the power to hedge without destroying the whole gambling game. I would not do that alone.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has been here long enough and he has been in the world long enough to know that we can not legislate for exceptions. We have to legislate for a rule; and I am here to find out what is needed and try my best to do the greatest good to the crowd that is helpless. These evils will creep in, and it is our duty to try to minimize them as much as possible; but in order to eliminate an incidental evil, or a partial evil, or an evil that accompanies a great good, I do not believe in burning down the house to get rid of rats. I will try to kill the rats and keep the house.

Mr. BROOKHART. Whether or not that ought to be done would depend on the house and the rats, of course.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to enlarge a little bit on the matter of the small miller, the small miller is very much needed to take care of the crops that are troubling the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the small miller is a thing of the past in Iowa. We used to have them, but the milling trust cleaned them all out.

Mr. COPELAND. There are small millers in other parts of the world. Of course Iowa has become such an enormous State now that they do things on a large scale.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; they do all our milling up in Minneapolis or over at Buffalo. The milling trust got all our mills. I can show you the wrecks of three or four of them in my own county. The board of trade and the gambling business helped them do it.

Mr. COPELAND. Wall Street, I suppose.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator really mean to say that he is willing now to restrict the farmer to the mill people?

Mr. BROOKHART. No.

Mr. SMITH. What is the Senator going to do then?

Mr. BROOKHART. I am going to give the farmer a chance to control his own market.

Mr. SMITH. When?

Mr. BROOKHART. I want to do it in the extra session of Congress, but I am willing to get rid of these gamblers right now.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is going to restrict the small miller and destroy him unless this system is permitted to continue, because it will all be in the hands——

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator will just listen a minute, I can tell him about the Coppock mill in Washington County, Iowa, about the Brighton mill in Washington County, Iowa, and about the Kalona mill in Washington County, Iowa, all of them big, fine mills in their day, and all of them wrecked by the same system that the Senator is defending here right now.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not want this to be a controversial matter. I want us to get down to the facts. What is the Senator going to substitute? Is he willing now to wipe out all the market places as they are now constituted and leave the wheat grower and the cotton grower to the purchases of the millers and manufacturers?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; I am not going to stop at wiping out these gamblers. I am going to set up a new machine that will give the farmer a square deal.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator tried to set it up here in the McNary-Haugen bill, did he not?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; I did not. I offered a substitute for that bill that would have set up something.

Mr. SMITH. What became of the substitute?

Mr. BROOKHART. There were 5 votes for it. There are going to be more the next time we vote. I think the Senator himself will vote for it the next time.

Mr. SMITH. I want the Senator to understand that I say here and now that all this legislation that we are attempting to pass is a mere palliative, trying to do the best we can for the helpless grower under the circumstances. I believe that every honest man in this body will try to vote to do him the most good and the least harm; but unless we give him equality of bargaining power in the market place, somebody has to be some sort of a substitute for him in that market place.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator had started to tell us how the New York Cotton Exchange had reformed its methods, and because of the reformation that the complaints had become obsolete.

Mr. SMITH. I will read some of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will not the Senator explain that without letting anybody interrupt him?

Mr. WHEELER. I simply wish to ask the Senator whether he is for the Vinson bill, the House amendment to the bill?

Mr. SMITH. I am for my own bill. I believe it is the best one.

Mr. WHEELER. Where is it?

Mr. SMITH. I have it right here in my hand.

Mr. WHEELER. Has it ever been reported out?

Mr. SMITH. It has been reported out and is on the calendar; and the reason why I did not push it was on account of what I thought was an honest effort on the part of the exchange to meet what we had demanded, either on their own motion or in legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. There are honest efforts, then, occasionally, on the part of the New York Cotton Exchange?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, Mr. President, I would not be willing to dub every man who buys and sells cotton, even the speculator, as being without principle. I think a good many of them are pretty high-class fellows.

Mr. BROOKHART. We have always heard of honest gamblers, have we not? That is an old saying.

Mr. COPELAND. There are some in New York.

Mr. BROOKHART. Plenty of them.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have never claimed for myself a monopoly of the virtues of mankind. I take my share along with all the rest of them. I presume the same motives that actuate most of us here actuate the other fellow. I am not going to stand here as the censor morem of men who are out making a living, as I am trying to do.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRIS. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. SMITH. No; I want to answer specifically the question that the Senator from New York asked. We pointed out these specific things that we thought needed reformation.

Mr. COPELAND. That is, in a conference?

Mr. SMITH. That was the result of this investigation last year. It was made manifest that certain reforms were essential. As I said, we went into the subject exhaustively. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] were in constant attendance, and these facts were dug up and made manifest, and I drafted that bill in conference with these men.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will pardon me, the facts, the abuses that existed, were outlined and made clear and presented to this conference, and as a result of the conference certain reforms were effected?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; the abuses were indicated; and these men at the next meeting of their board, or in a meeting of their board, incorporated these reforms into their rules and by-laws; and I thought it was nothing but fair to give them an opportunity to see how they would work out, because I am frank to state that there are some of them as to which neither I nor anybody else can determine what will be the practical result.

Mr. President, right in this connection let me call your attention to what occurred while I was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. A very enthusiastic reformer came in to see me one day and said he believed the solution of the whole freight transportation problem was the establishment of a mileage basis for freight; that any man could understand that it cost more to carry a given tonnage a hundred miles than to carry it 10 miles. I think a man could go out amongst those unsophisticated in the transportation problem and convince anybody that it was highway robbery for railroads to carry feight a thousand miles for the same rate for which they would carry it 500 miles. Yet if that principle were applied generally the whole commercial system and the whole mercantile system and trading system of America would be disrupted.

We have a postage rate of 2 cents for carrying a letter either to San Francisco or carrying it merely up the street. The necessities of organized business demand that we have certain systems that will take care of the situation, and no arbitrary rule is going to work, no matter how beautiful the theory. The same thing is applicable in the matter of trading.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, in regard to the railroad-rate question, I want to ask the Senator if the discrimination in rates did not build up the big centers at the expense of the country districts?

Mr. SMITH. I do not doubt that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not be diverted from the question at issue. The Senator has brought out the fact that there were certain abuses, and the Senator himself was so interested that he prepared a bill, but as a result of conferences the abuses which did exist have been done away with.

Mr. SMITH. As far as the exchange can do so by their rules.

Mr. COPELAND. Therefore there is at this moment no reason for legislation, provided faith is kept by the stock exchange people. Will not the Senator enlarge upon that, and not be diverted from it?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from New York voted against legislation of that kind before the evils were corrected. If he knows now that they did exist, why was it that he supported them then?

Mr. COPELAND. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator voted against this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The Caraway bill?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to vote against it again, too.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, everybody knew that.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think this is germane, for this reason: The effect of some of the abuses we knew, but the causes we did not know and they were brought out. We specifically named them as we went along, and I incorporated them in a bill and, with the exception of two, the New York Cotton Exchange have incorporated them all in their by-laws. I have no reason to impeach their faith or their good intent, and if they will faithfully carry out what they have incorporated I see no reason why, in accord with what looks like a fair deal, they should not be allowed at least a time to demonstrate two things—the practicability of the things we suggest and their good faith in carrying them out.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. How does the Senator's bill differ from the Vinson bill? I do not know; I am asking for information.

Mr. SMITH. In large part they are identical when it comes to an amendment of the existing law, the cotton futures act. In my bill I have not been as liberal in the granting of power to the Agricultural Department as Mr. VINSON has been in his.

Mr. WHEELER. In what respect?

Mr. SMITH. There are numerous instances. His conforms more, perhaps, to what is known as the grain grading act, which was repudiated here this afternoon by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], than mine does. My bill amends the present law in the particulars in which the investigation of last year indicated it needed amending. The two bills are here, and I would be glad to have Senators take them and compare them. In their amendatory aspect they are about identical, but when it comes to the question of the delegation of power to the Department of Agriculture his goes further than mine.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator that if his bill is not more effective than the present law so far as wheat is concerned, it would not be very effective.

Mr. SMITH. I think every Senator from the cotton-growing States will readily admit that the act of which I had the honor of being the original author, known as the cotton futures act—and I shall take some time before this discussion is over to show how it works—did result in a tremendous improvement in the marketing of cotton. Of course, as time went on, other evils grew up, and we have amended the act from time to time. I propose now to amend it again, hoping to minimize as far as possible the evils inherent in every business transaction, and more pronouncedly so, perhaps, in the raising and selling of cotton.

The Senate must recollect that 60 per cent of the American cotton crop is sold and converted abroad. Populations aggregating hundreds of millions of people use American cotton. It goes into thousands of industries with which very few of us perhaps are acquainted. I have been informed of the fact, and I expect it will be news, that airplane propellers are made out of compressed cotton. The tensile strength resists the terrible centrifugal force essential to pull an airplane. It goes into the construction of almost all of the manufactured articles that need great tensile strength, and it does not easily yield to erosion. It does not deteriorate like other fibers, so that it is of universal use. Hence it invites speculation, and were the farmers who produce it sufficiently wealthy to hold it in their grasp and demand its value, nobody knows what the price of cotton would be.

It is that I have been working for since I have been in the Senate, to try to ameliorate the marketing conditions under which we, on the farm, have to live, hoping some time to have the body politic recognize that something has to be done to put the agricultural interests of this country on an equality with the purchaser of agricultural products in the market places. I am not going to vote to destroy a system which, in my opinion, is helpful as compared with what it would be if the farmer were left alone to the mercy of those who convert his products into the finished goods.

Mr. President, when we consider that five to six ounces of the simplest weave in cotton textiles known to the manufacturing world brings from $10 to $15 a pound in the simple finished article like a shirt, while the raw material out of which it is made brings from 15 to 18 cents a pound; when we consider that it takes 12 months of the most laborious toil to produce that pound, and perhaps 12 minutes to produce the five ounces, one $15, the other 15 cents; when we consider that $12 is charged for about a pound and a half of cowhide in the shape of a pair of shoes, it taking less than a day, perhaps, to complete the article, and that the steer from which the hide comes brings 3 cents a pound, and that it takes three years to raise the steer, as against an hour or an hour and a half to make the shoes; about $12 a pound for one, three cents a pound for the other, three years to raise the pound of the raw material, and three hours to make the finished article; there seems to be a margin somewhere for reformation, and how to bring it about is the question.

Does the man who is getting the $12 voluntarily come in and say, "The profit is so great I am not going to charge it"? In the case of the shoe manufacturer, if he is making that profit, he has the power to meet the board of directors and say, "The man who raised the hide is entitled to more." Does he do it? The man who spins the shirt has the power to step out and say, "Our profits are greater. Let us raise the price to the farmer. We can get that much. Why not encourage the farmer?" He does not do it. But the man who thinks that the intrinsic value of the thing the shirt is made out of is worth more is trying to make an investment, and we give him a chance to go on the exchange and try it, and the man who produces the raw material should be given the power, either by legislation or by the formation of a corporation or cooperation, the power to say, "All right; when you come to sell me the finished article you charge me everything, every cent of overhead, plus your profit. When you come to buy my product, you deduct everything. You do not pay the freight, and under the cotton contract the world over, the 50–50 contract, you take out cost, insurance, freight, and 6 per cent for tare. You do not even pay the farmer for the bag and ties."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am at a loss to know how the Senator from South Carolina justifies this system he is standing up for and defending so eloquently here to-day, the system controlling the production of shoes, which is comparatively the same system as that of the gamblers in cotton and wheat.

Mr. SMITH. I am talking about the man who converts them. Why does he not voluntarily divide his profits? The only way we get even 15 to 18 cents a pound is because somebody gets in there and says, "You are not able to name your price. We will buy the product and risk it, to see if we can not get something."

Mr. FRAZIER. I had the privilege of sitting with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina as chairman of the subcommittee that heard the complaints regarding the abuses on the cotton exchange. It was demonstrated there, I think, beyond any question of doubt, that one cotton brokerage firm down in the South made more money in cornering the cotton market than did all the farmers of the Southern States of the United States make in raising cotton in 10 years' time.

Mr. SMITH. Suppose they did; what does that prove?

Mr. FRAZIER. It proves that the gambling in cotton held down the price of the farmer and everything that farmers use in the South, just the same as it does with everything of the farmers in the North.

Mr. SMITH. All right; suppose we had not had it and we had had to sell to the mills; has the Senator any idea what we would have received?

Mr. FRAZIER. It would not have been any worse.

Mr. SMITH. Suppose millions of people go in and buy for a rise while others are trying to depress the price. They take the place of the farmer and the mill man. The bulls and the bears illustrate the fight between the well-organized forces in the market place. They have practically the same resources and they fight that battle. When the bulls have put the price up they want to get the benefit of it, but when we restrict those helpless producers to the organized manufacturer God knows what will happen.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator speaks about bulls and bears putting the market up and down, but the statistics show that the men who are bulls one day are bears the next day, and vice versa.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but there is always a bull for every bear.

Mr. FRAZIER. And they are not working for the interests of the farmer by any means.

Mr. SMITH. No; and the farmer is not working for their interest. We are all working for our own interests

> The good old rule
> Sufficeth them, the simple plan,
> That they should take who have the power,
> And they should keep who can.

I am not asking for any philanthrophy, but I am saying that under the conditions as they exist now, until the farmers can be organized and hold the value of their products in their own hands, somebody somewhere has got to stand between the farmer and the manufacturer either of their wheat or of their cotton.

Mr. BROOKHART. Somebody ought to do that, I think, but let me ask the Senator a question on that point. Referring to the people who are pretending to stand between them now, is it not a fact that the reason why they can buy all the cotton on the exchange is because they control the credits and can get whatever money is necessary to handle it in that way?

Mr. SMITH. I am not going to allow any of those questions, and the attitude which some Senators assume, to put me in the position of defending unholy gambling and brutal hammering of the market. It was for that reason that I introduced and was fortunate enough to have passed the first cotton futures act. It was for that reason that from time to time I have introduced bills to amend that act. It was for that reason that I brought in the bill which has been anticipated by the exchange and the proposed reforms incorporated. What I want ultimately, though I doubt if it ever comes, is to see the agriculturists of the country realize the power that is inherent in them and in their possession and in their vocation, and combine together to exact from the world that wears their goods and consumes their food a just return to those who clothe and feed the world. But until we do get that result I do not propose to discard the only modicum of relief that the farmer has at all, because I see the evil of trying to remedy it by precipitating a greater evil.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think I am in agreement with the Senator's final conclusion, but standing in the way of that is this gambling system, as well as the monopoly system of the millers. I do not believe we are ever going to get our rights by surrendering to either one of them.

Mr. SMITH. There again is that expression "surrender." I do not consider it anything like a surrender if we intelligently try to make the market place as nearly righteous as it can be, when those who produce the raw material have no voice in it at all. It is turned over entirely to the second degree. The man who makes the wheat never prices a bushel. The man who makes the cotton never prices a pound. Until we get a system by which we can substitute a better plan for what we have, it is absolutely suicidal to destroy what we have.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let us begin by hitting the first blow at the gamblers.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent agreement with reference to limiting debate. I ask unanimous consent that, beginning to-morrow at 4 o'clock, no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon the bill or any amendment that may be pending thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have heard several Senators say they want to speak on the measure. I would like to suggest to the Senator that, as the hour is now late, he let the proposal go over until to-morrow. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the debate shall be brought to as speedy a close as possible, but I would suggest that to-morrow, when we have a more full attendance, he bring the matter up again. I would not like to have it acted upon this evening.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unanimous-consent request.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] asks unanimous consent that beginning at 4 o'clock on the calendar day of February 13, 1929, no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill S. 1093 or any amendment that may be pending thereto.

Mr. COPELAND. What objection is there to that proposal?

Mr. SMITH. As I said, several Senators have indicated their intention to speak on the measure. They want an opportunity to address the Senate on the question, and I merely suggested that action on the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be deferred until to-morrow.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well, Mr. President. To-morrow immediately after the convening of the Senate I shall submit the request.

Mr. SMITH. That is all right.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 1271. An act to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory-bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes;

S. 3178. An act to provide an additional method for collecting taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 56. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to issue receipts to senders for ordinary mail of any character, and to fix the fees chargeable therefor;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, February 11, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou Eternal Spirit, Thou hast laid the foundations of heaven and earth and secured their wide expanse and majesty. Forever shall our prayer and praise go up unto Thee for the deeds of blessing Thou hast done. Bless with Thy presence the proceedings of this hour, and the passion of this purpose. Allow consecration, contentment, and peace to abide over every day. We are now reminded of the many sons who have been born out of the service of the Republic, men who could bear the strain and criticism, men who could combine dissent and loyalty, and men who could build upon the ruined walls resulting on the horizon of our country. O God, Thy providence has brought to this hour the ship of state and permitted her anchorage to be cast into the international waters of amity and honor. We thank Thee for the flag and for what it means—emblem of fraternity, equality, and liberty. May it ever shine in heaven's blue to represent all the States united now and forever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 15601) making appropriations for the Executive Office and various independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

INSPECTION OF THE BATTLE FIELD OF PALO ALTO, CAMERON, TEX., AND BATTLE FIELD OF RESACA DE LA PALMA, CAMERON, TEX.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 278, a bill to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Palo Alto, Tex., and the battle field of Resaca de la Palma, Tex., disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 278, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MORIN, MAAS, and McSWAIN.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE, GAME, AND FISH

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 15585) to authorize appropriations for the construction of certain roads and trails in the States, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 15585, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while I am not opposed to the amendments in this bill that might be considered as authorizing amendments, it was a unanimous-consent bill authorizing the building of certain roads in the States. Are the buildings contained in the bill and I have a question about the bill. On the other hand, building the roads, this bill would be the proper bill to consider. Is only $500 would be the proper bill to consider. I may not object. I hope the conferees will be sure that the buildings are in accordance with the bill.

Mr. MORIN. I will call the conferees' attention to the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can any appropriation for Governors Island be in this bill?

Mr. MORIN. I think not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INCREASE OF CERTAIN APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 16422, the Deficiency Appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 16422, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to address an inquiry to my colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee. Have we any assurance of any understanding that certain of the amendments that were put in this bill by the Senate will come back to the House? For instance, the lump-sum appropriation for one and the amendment striking out the provision made by the House Appropriations Committee for the reservation as a decker airfield for examination for bachelor officers' quarters?

Mr. SIMMONS. As I have explained to the gentleman on those amendments, in some form, will have to come back to the House, either the Senate receding, the House receding, or receding with amendments. I can not give the gentleman any assurance about what will be done in conference, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I expect, of course, that the House conferees will not recede. The only question is if the House conferees do not recede whether the House conferees will bring the amendment back to be considered by the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am assuming that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] will be one of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am glad to.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I can give the gentleman no assurance except those given under the rules of the House. I have no way of anticipating what may happen to the amendments in conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If the gentleman from New York is through, I would like to know the attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], and I am hopeful that his attitude is not to be one that is going to take up the time of the conferees with respect to the lump-sum appropriation. That is a matter that has been fought out here time and time again, but I would like to ask the gentleman if he will give us a chance to be heard on the House floor before there is any recession on the Caraway amendment?

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

INSPECTION OF THE BATTLE FIELDS OF BRICES CROSSROADS, MISS., AND TUPELO, MISS.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 8736, a bill to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Crossroads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 8736, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MORIN, JAMES, and MCSWAIN.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 13825, a bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 13825, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, there was one amendment put in this bill that might be regarded as a minor amendment, but is not necessarily so. It was an amendment authorizing a building to be erected on the aviation field at Yuma, Ariz. If that building is exclusively for the purposes of the Army, then it is quite in harmony with the bill, and I have no question about it. On the other hand, if it is a building that is for general use, then for us to erect such a building at Yuma—although the cost is only $5,000—would be the first step in a program that would cost a good many million dollars. I hope the conferees will give study to that and before agreeing to that building will be sure that it is exclusively for Army use.

Mr. MORIN. I will call the conferees' attention to the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill contain any appropriation for Governors Island?

Mr. MORIN. I think it does, but I am not sure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 16422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 16422, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to address an inquiry to my colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee. Have we any assurance or any understanding that certain of the amendments that were put in this bill by the Senate will come back to the House? For instance, the lump-sum appropriation for one and the amendment striking out the provision made by the House Appropriations Committee or the reservation as to teachers eligible for examination for teachers' licenses?

Mr. SIMMONS. As I have explained to the gentleman all of those amendments, in some form, will have to come back to the House, either the Senate receding, the House receding, or receding with amendments. I can give the gentleman no assurance about what will be done in conference, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I expect, of course, that the House conferees will not recede. The only question is if the House conferees do not recede whether the House conferees will bring the amendments back to be considered by the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am assuming that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] will be one of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am, too.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I can give the gentleman no assurances except those given under the rules of the House. I have no way of anticipating what may happen to the amendments in conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, if the gentleman from New York is through. We, of course, know the attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], and I am hopeful that that attitude is not the one that is going to be taken by the other conferees with respect to the lump-sum appropriation. That is a matter that has been fought out here time and time again; but I would like to ask the gentleman if he will give us a chance to be heard on it in the House before there is any recession on the Caraway amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will give no assurances as to what is going to happen in the conference or what action we may take on that or on any other amendment. I do not think we should be asked to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not asking that. I am asking that when the gentleman brings the matter back to the House that he give us a chance to be heard on it. He must bring that back to the House under the rules, but the gentleman could come back and move the previous question and not give us a chance to be heard on it at all. I think the gentleman should give us a chance to be heard on that amendment before moving the previous question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the gentleman ought to permit us to go to conference without being bound beforehand.

Mr. BLANTON. I have never refused, except in support of my party, to send a bill to conference, but we do want a chance to be heard a little before the gentleman moves the previous question.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have an answer from the gentleman.

Mr. SIMMONS. I take it if there is any amendment that the House desires to discuss we can have a reasonable time to do it. There are some amendments that have been thrashed out repeatedly in the House, such as the fiscal relations amendment, on which the attitude of the House is well known and fixed.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on the fiscal relations matter in spite of my friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Further reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Texas, for the reason he happens to be in favor of it, will not at the same time be in favor of shutting off debate.

Mr. BLANTON. No, no.

Mr. GRIFFIN. This is a matter, so far as I can see, that is still open to debate. Some water has gone over the dam since it was considered in the House, and I think there is room for a little discussion in view of what has transpired in the Senate, and it seems to me when that proposition comes back to the House, we ought to have an opportunity to have some discussion of it, and that is the only object I have in making my request.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me there is no reason to fear that reasonable debate will not be allowed on any amendment. The attitude of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] is pretty well known on this bill and also his attitude toward the House in bringing back conference reports. So I think that the gentleman need not fear any difficulty in securing time for reasonable debate.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman from Connecticut has given an assurance that is not warranted by past experience. Last year, when the bill came back to the House, the gentleman will recall that the previous question was moved and there was no opportunity given for discussion. I could not even get two minutes on the bill. I think the precedent established last year ought not to be followed this year and that is my reason for addressing this inquiry to the gentleman now.

Mr. TILSON. There has been no disposition during the present session to unreasonably restrict debate on conference reports.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, of course, it would make a good deal of difference, I suppose, how long drawn out the conference may be.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Of course.

Mr. CRAMTON. If it is held until the last day of the session, it would not be possible to give as much time for debate as it would be if the report came in sooner.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman from New York will recall that the matter on which we had a vote last year was a matter that had been thoroughly discussed in the House when the bill was in its original form, a matter upon which the House had all the information that was available, and the House was operating then under the stress of time, and in compliance with the request or the suggestion of the leaders on both sides of the House that there was no need for debate and that the House had matters it wanted to act upon, I did move the previous question last year.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Then I take it the gentleman is not in the same inexorable mood that he was in last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. We will meet that situation when we come to it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman does not intend, I presume, to bring a conference report back to the House and have unlimited debate on the so-called Burlingame amendment, which was discussed at length yesterday?

Mr. SIMMONS. As I have said, we will cross that bridge when we come to it. I do not know in what shape the bill will come back from the conference, and I do not know what the condition may be in the House at that time. The House has it in its power to vote down the previous question of it wants to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin was in the chair at the time of the discussion of the Burlingame matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SIMMONS, HOLADAY, and GRIFFIN.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 17053), making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time, referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. SANDLIN reserved all points of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL, from the Committee on Rules, presented a privileged report for printing in the RECORD.

The report contained the following resolution:

House Resolution 318

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization shall have one legislative day for the consideration of the following bills:

H. R. 16927. A bill to clarify the law relating to the temporary admission of aliens to the United States.

H. R. 16926. A bill granting preference within the quota to certain aliens trained and skilled in a particular art, craft, technique, business, or science.

S. 5094. A bill making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law.

That after general debate on each bill, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, each bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. In the case of the bill (S. 5094) it shall be in order to consider without the intervention of the point of order, as provided in clause 7 of Rule XVI, the committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization now in the bill, and such committee amendment for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of the reading of each bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on each bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Referred to the calendar and ordered printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND GRANTS FOR MINERS' HOSPITALS IN UTAH AND ARIZONA

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 15732) making an additional grant of land for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 15732 from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, the House passed the bill with a grant of 50,000 acres of land to the State of Utah on the plea that the enabling act of the State of Utah provided for certain grants, and that the grant for the mining hospital was a little out of line with other grants contemplated by the enabling act. Now, the Senate amendment appropriates for a grant of 50,000 acres for the State of Arizona. There is no information before the Congress as to what the situation is or to what extent it is justified. The only statement made in behalf of it is of a character that would warrant a similar grant to every western State.

The amendment is not germane to the bill that went to the Senate. I do not know whether I would favor such a grant for Arizona if it came before Congress in a way to make it possible to consider whether it was justified. I shall be obliged to object to this amendment being concurred in because it is not a matter that we have had any information about or any opportunity to investigate.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, may I explain that I have made personal investigation, and that the conditions in Arizona are almost identical with those of Utah, except that the fund realized from the grant is very much smaller than it is in Utah. I hope the gentleman will not object. Arizona has not been a State as long as has Utah, which accounts in a measure for the fund being smaller, but Arizona needs this additional grant.

Mr. CRAMTON. The proper parliamentary procedure would be for the gentleman from Arizona to introduce a bill, let it go to the committee of which the gentleman from Utah is chairman, and from the gentleman's position it is certain it would be assured of very fair consideration, and leave the House a chance to consider it. I have heretofore opposed this adding of important amendments in the Senate that were not germane to House bills, and I shall feel obliged in this case to adhere to that policy and object to the agreement to this amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield to hear a statement from me?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. When the bill passed the House and was referred to the proper committee in the Senate, the point was made that the situation in Arizona was identically the same as that in Utah; that the original land grant under the enabling act for the Territories of Utah and Arizona were practically identical with respect to acreages of land given for various purposes. In the second place, that the mining industry in Arizona occupied as important, if not a more important, position among the industries of Arizona than the mining industry in Utah; that the number of disabled miners in Arizona was as great, if not greater, than in the State of Utah. The Senate committee having considered the facts with respect to the amendment approved of it and the Senate passed the bill as the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys had reported it.

Those are the facts. The enabling act of Arizona was similar to the enabling act of the State of Utah. It was out of line, as Utah was out of line with the other grants given the State for other purposes. It is a fact that the mining industry is by far the largest industry in Arizona. The development of Arizona was due largely to the development of its mineral deposits. I think that if it is legitimate to grant 50,000 acres additional to the State of Utah for the purposes of taking care of disabled miners it is equally just and equally right to make an additional grant of 50,000 acres to the State of Arizona for the same purpose.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The question has been asked as to the attitude of the Secretary of the Interior. He makes no opposition?

Mr. COLTON. The Secretary of the Interior interposes no objection to the passage of this measure with the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. So I understand.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a regular way for all these facts to be brought to the attention of Congress. Nothing is more dangerous than to permit the other legislative body to get the habit of adding important nongermane amendments to House bills. Here is a bill whose title only says that it is to give some lands to the State of Utah; yet we find that there is an item with 50,000 acres to be given to the State of Arizona. There has been no notice to the House of that, and I just happen to read the RECORD enough to know the situation. I am obliged to object to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. For the purpose of asking the gentleman a question with respect to parliamentary procedure, I am not sufficiently well acquainted with parliamentary procedure to have information of my own, but is there any way in which the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] might be withdrawn and the bill as passed by the Senate, as amended, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands of the House for appropriate action by that committee, and be then brought out on the floor of the House?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I am willing only to make this one suggestion to the gentleman. I have already made it. If he will introduce a bill, then we will get a report from the department and we will have a chance to consider the matter on its merits.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' CEMETERY, GETTYSBURG, PA.

Mr. MENGES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an historical sketch compiled by Myron H. Bent, the Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Daily Times, of the laying out of the National Soldiers' Cemetery at Gettysburg. Mr. William Saunders, a landscape-garden expert, who was an employee of the Department of Agriculture, in 1863 was engaged by Judge David Wills, of Gettysburg, who was the projector and promoter of the national cemetery, with the approval of Governor Curtin, to lay out the cemetery. Mr. Saunders, as I understand it, has never been paid for the work that he has done. I am not asking for an appropriation to pay him now. I simply want to incorporate an historical sketch of his work in the RECORD in order that it might be preserved and handed down to posterity. It is a magnificent piece of work and its merit should be recognized and perpetuated. The cemetery is owned by the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MENGES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

SKETCH OF THE LAYING OUT OF THE NATIONAL SOLDIERS' CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURG, PA.

By Myron H. Brent, Washington correspondent Brooklyn Daily Times

Had it not been for two men, possibly one, the immortal Gettysburg address of Abraham Lincoln, which, with the famous speech of Pericles, ranks among the most eloquent contributions to English literature, might never have been written or delivered. Various accounts are given as to when the Great Emancipator wrote this epic, comparable in grandeur and majesty with the Psalms—whether on the train to Gettysburg or in his room the night before the event—but it is doubtful if the true story of how it happened to be written at all has been told, or if so, it will bear being retold on this Lincoln anniversary. How did the occasion arise?

Two men are mainly responsible for it. One is David Wills, a lawyer and judge of Gettysburg, and the other is William Saunders, an architectural landscape gardener of Scotland, who came to this country in 1848, at the age of 26. After the great Battle of Gettysburg on July 1, 2, and 3, 1863, the high point of the war, with its terrible slaughter of Union men under General Meade and Confederates under General Lee, vast numbers of the former were left only partially or improperly buried. Judge Wills conceived the idea of a national cemetery on the famous battle field and communicated it to Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, who was favorably impressed with it, and authorized Judge Wills to proceed to develop the plan and carry it out.

William Saunders had come from Philadelphia in 1862, having first lived at New Haven, Conn., after coming to this country. At the time he was employed in the Department of Agriculture at Washington as landscape gardener and superintendent of grounds. Mr. Saunders had evidently made some reputation in this country along his line of work at Philadelphia and Baltimore, which is probably responsible for the fact that he was sought out to design, plan, and lay out the beautiful grounds at Gettysburg known as the Soldiers' National Cemetery. Visitors to Gettysburg always comment upon the symmetry and beauty of design of the spot where brave men sleep who struggled there "that government of the people, by the people, for the people might not perish from the earth," and who "have hallowed it beyond our poor power to add or detract."

Mr. Saunders died in 1900, but has a daughter living in Washington who has been employed in the Department of Agriculture for many years. Among her father's effects is a sort of autobiography in which her father noted incidents and events in his active and useful life. Not the least of these is the interesting account of his part in fashioning the national cemetery at Gettysburg, with a statement of how it all came about. He knew President Lincoln well, to whom he showed his plan, and he sat on the platform near him when he delivered his never-to-be-forgotten speech that is known by every schoolboy. The story is best told in his own words:

"About six weeks after the battle I received a letter from David Wills, of Gettysburg, acting as agent for Governor Curtin, asking me to meet him at that place for the purpose of consulting upon the selection of a site and land for a cemetery to be used for the interment of soldiers who fell in that battle. The letter, not being addressed only to Washington, did not come into my possession until about three weeks after and as it called for immediate action, I wrote to Mr. Willis, told him of the situation, and asked if it would be too late now. He answered at once to come on.

"When I reached there I found that Mr. Wills had purchased property. I was pleased with the site, but saw that it was angular, and its front on the Baltimore Pike was only about 150 feet. I therefore told Mr. Wills to get more ground, extending the front line and straightening out other lines, which was speedily done, adding about 5 acres more to the cemetery and simplifying its outlines.

"On this my first visit I studied the ground thoroughly and thought of various methods of treatment. It occurred to me—and I felt it all important under any plan—that the remains of the soldiers from each State should be laid together in a group. In fact, I had examined the ground before suggesting an addition to it and had employed an evening considering how best to arrange for interments. The surface was somewhat undulating, some high or elevated points, but others low and inferior in comparison, so that in distributing the interments by States some would, of necessity, be placed in the lower portions and thus an apparently unjust discrimination might be inferred. I ultimately concluded that a central point on the highest reach of the ground be designated for a monument, and a semicircular arrangement made, so that the appropriation for each State would be a part of a common center and the position of each lot would be relatively of equal importance.

"The ground was marked out in parallels 12 feet in width, thus giving a length of about 7 feet for the interments and 5 feet of pathway between the next parallel. On the inner circle of each a heavy line of granite curbing was placed. This made a continuous circle of gravestones, as it were. About 2½ feet was marked on these stones, the width for each interment, and the name carved on the granite at its head. These blocks showed 10 inches above the surface of the ground and show a width of 10 inches on their upper surface or face. The name, company, and regiment being carved in the granite opposite each interment, secured a simple and impressive arrangement, combined with permanence and durability.

"Having made rude drawings and measurements as to the space required for this plan, I went over the field and was convinced that more space would be required at this particular point to enable this plan to be carried out. Then the question of adding to it by further purchases of land was conceded, and ultimately some 5 acres of an adjoining apple orchard were procured, which allowed the plan to be carried out.

"Having secured such measurements and survey of the ground as would enable me to formulate a plan or design for the entire space, I hastened to Washington and commenced to make the plan. I do not now recall the exact sequence of events, but everything was hurried to get at work and remove bodies which were scattered over the battle field and in danger of obliteration, as the farmers were anxious to plow for crops.

"I employed a friend and surveyor, James S. Townsend, to go to Gettysburg, and with others procure a list of the dead and the State they came from, so as to help me in the disposition of plan of interments. This took some time. I also sent him a copy of the plan, and he proceeded to set that portion out, so as to provide for removal of bodies at as early a day as was possible. The work of exhuming the bodies was commenced on the 27th day of October (1863), but it was so protracted by ungenial weather during the winter that it was not finished until well on in March (1864). The number of bodies ultimately found exceeded the original calculations, and this also retarded the finish of the operations, and caused continual alterations in the detail of the plan, as it had to be extended to meet these additions to certain of the States. This, however, was only a matter of apportionment and did not alter the idea of the plan. The working sketch was in the hands of the surveyor, who was pushing the work, especially that part for the interments.

"A few days before the dedication of the grounds, President Lincoln sent word to me that he desired me to call at his office on the evening of the 17th (November), and take with me the plan of the cemetery. I was on hand at the appointed time, and spread the plan on his office table. He took much interest in it, asked about its surroundings, about Culp's Hill, Round Top, etc., and seemed familiar with the topography of the place, although he had never been there. He was much pleased with the method of the graves, said it differed from the ordinary cemetery, and, after I had explained the reasons, said it was an admirable and benefiting arrangement. He asked me if I was going up to Gettysburg to-morrow. I told him that I intended to be there and take up the plan. He replied, 'Well, I may see you on the train.'

"I went up on the 18th, but I think now that I did not go on the train he went on; I went on an earlier train. On reaching Gettysburg I found every place crowded; could not get any hotel or boarding house. In fact there were not many hotels in the town. I spent the night in the parlor of an acquaintance, along with quite a crowd, and if we slept at all we did so sitting in chairs. Next morning—the 19th—the town was all excitement, and all faces were turned toward the cemetery.

"About noon Edward Everett ascended the platform and commenced his oration, which was well received, although his detailed account of the battle was lengthy, and I think some considered it tiresome. I should suppose that he spoke for nearly two hours. I was sitting on the platform near to President Lincoln, only Gen. O. O. Howard between me and the President, and was only a few feet from him when he delivered his memorable address.

"After Mr. Everett had finished his oration, the following hymn, composed by Mr. B. B. French, of Washington, a gentleman I knew well, was beautifully sung by a quartet from Baltimore. It was very impressive:

"'Tis holy ground—
The spot where, in their graves,
We place our country's braves,
Who fell in freedom's holy cause,
Fighting for liberties and laws;
Let tears abound.

"Here let them rest;
And summer's heat and winter's cold
Shall glow and freeze above this mould—
A thousand years shall pass away—
A nation still shall mourn this clay,
Which now is blest.

"Here, where they fell,
Oft shall the widow's tear be shed,
Oft shall fond parents mourn their dead;
The orphan here shall kneel and weep,
And maidens, where their lovers sleep,
Their woes shall tell.

"Great God in Heaven!
Shall all this sacred blood be shed?
Shall we thus mourn our glorious dead?
Oh, shall the end be wrath and woe
The knell of freedom's overthrow,
A country riven?

"It will not be!
We trust, O God, Thy gracious powers
To aid us in our darkest hours,
This be our prayer—'O Father, save
A people's freedom from its grave,
All praise to Thee.'"

The story of how the address was received has been many times told. Either the great audience did not fully grasp its meaning and significance or else it was overawed by its sublimity, for the applause while generous was not great. There was one man who grasped its significance, and that was Edward Everett, who immediately told the President that his speech would long be remembered after his own had been forgotten. President Lincoln stayed the night before at the brick home of Judge Wills, on the main street of Gettysburg, and the window of his room is still marked with an X, and it is shown to visitors. But two daily papers the morning after the dedication carried President Lincoln's speech. The New York Tribune merely stated that "the President made a few extemporaneous remarks."

Mr. Saunders continues his narrative:

"It was then that President Lincoln spoke.

"The project of this cemetery was started by David Wills of Gettysburg. Soon after the battle he found bodies scattered over the fields, some of them but rudely buried, the farmers plowing over graves and seemingly careless about the dead. Mr. Wills wrote to Governor Curtin and suggested that the State of Pennsylvania should see to it that the dead should be better cared for. Governor Curtin promptly and strongly took up the matter, and authorized Mr. Wills to communicate with the governors of other States whose troops participated in the battle, asking for their sanction to remove the dead at the expense of Pennsylvania. This proposition was not favorably entertained, as each State wanted to share the expense. A convention of governors was convened at Altoona, and among other proceedings it was agreed to employ me to furnish a plan for the improvement of the cemetery grounds. Hence the letter of Lawyer Wills to me as above mentioned. Who brought up my name to this convention I never found, as I was not aware of any of the governors knowing me.

"The making of roadways and planting trees and shrubs were executed by contract, and were done in a satisfactory manner. Twenty years after the planting I visited the cemetery and marked many of the trees for removal, as the groups were too thick. By this time the cemetery had been turned over to the General Government. For several years, I can not recall how many, the cemetery was controlled by commissioners, one from each of the States concerned, appointed by the governors of the respective States. It was ultimately turned over to the Government and was placed in control of the Quartermaster General of the United States Army. This officer, considering that it was essential to do something in the cemetery, planted a lot of shrubbery in the lawns, or open grass spaces, which destroyed the beauty of the grounds; but this was in keeping with the performances of military officers, who, as a general thing, are very destitute of artistic taste in anything. Up to that time the plan of the planting had developed so that the design was apparent. A friend of mine, who had participated in a Fourth of July celebration at Gettysburg, and not knowing that I had ever had anything to do with it, told me that if I wanted to see an exquisite example of landscape gardening I should visit the cemetery grounds. I said to him that I had designed these grounds for that especial purpose.

"The plan contemplated no conspicuous headstones at any of the graves. All were to be treated alike and be of uniform simplicity. As time went on, military companies sent headstones, some of them quite elaborate, requesting them to be set at the head of certain graves. After a time, and after several of such stones had been received, the subject of their distribution was referred to me. I decided that they should be grouped in a portion of the grounds which I designated, which was done, and thus saved the uniformity and simplicity of the plan. On my plan when submitted I titled it, 'Soldiers' National Cemetery,' which was discussed by the commissioners, and they agreed that the name was quite applicable, and it was adopted."

What follows from the autobiography of Mr. Saunders seems hardly credible. It is almost unbelievable that one who had evolved and carried out such a harmonious and beautiful design could go entirely unrewarded. In addition to much labor there was considerable expense connected with it, and the author never received one cent from any source for all his talent, pains, and labor. He says:

"At a meeting of the commissioners held at Harrisburg, December 17, 1863, the following resolutions were passed:

"'On motion of Mr. Alfred Coit, of Connecticut, the plans and designs of the Soldiers' National Cemetery as laid out by Mr. William Saunders were adopted by the convention. A motion was made by Mr. Coit returning thanks to Mr. Saunders for the designs and drawings furnished gratuitously for the Soldiers' National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pa., which was unanimously adopted.

"'On motion of Mr. Brown, of Ohio:

"'Resolved, That Mr. William Saunders be authorized to furnish 40 photos of the plan of the Soldiers' National Cemetery for the use of the States having soldiers buried therein, which was adopted.'

"The last resolution meant more work for me. In order to get good photographs I had to make a new copy of the plan, for all the other copies were more or less colored, and a good photo could not be made from them. Making a new copy was tedious, and I worked on it nights and Sundays. I ultimately procured the number desired and dispatched them to the various States. I do not think that I ever received a cent of remuneration for this work so flippantly resolved. The commissioners never seemed to have any treasury to draw from, and although I sent in the photographer's bill, I had to pay it. Mr. Edward Everett wrote to me that he was desirous of having a plan of the cemetery made, so that it could be folded in a pamphlet with his oration. This I also prepared for the engraver on so small a scale that I strained my eyes considerably, and it took me considerable time, but I finished it and made a good job of it. For all this drawing, planning, and time and money expended I never had any acknowledgment except that mentioned in the above resolutions passed at a private meeting, as stated."

Mr. Saunders, at the request of General Grant, when President, designed the memorial grounds of the Lincoln tomb at Springfield. He continued with the Department of Agriculture many years as landscape gardener and established the arboretum. He directed the planting of 300,000 trees in Washington. He was master of the National Grange the first six years of its life and was one of its founders. Many years previous to its founding in 1867 he conceived the idea and wrote for publication an article suggesting and outlining such an institution. He was a man of vision and talent, and his handiwork is seen throughout the country.

It would seem a fitting time at this Lincoln anniversary for Congress to prove that republics are not ungrateful and pass a bill to establish an appropriate marker or tablet to the memory of William Saunders in the Soldiers' National Cemetery at Gettysburg, briefly reciting the facts above mentioned. It is a recognition already too long delayed. One who conceived and designed such a beautiful spot and furnished the setting for the delivery of one of the world's masterpieces of English prose ought not to go unrewarded, unhonored, and unsung. Without David Wills and William Saunders the world might have been deprived of one of its brightest gems in literature.

RELIEF OF C. TISDALL CO. AND OTHERS

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3955, for the relief of the C. Tisdall Co., Herbert W. Smith, Newman Bros., Thomas J. Murphy Co., formerly Edward A. Brown Co., and Giles P. Dunn, jr., with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3955, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

AUTHORIZING CREDIT IN DISBURSING ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4258 to authorize credit in the disbursing of certain officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4258, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a House bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And was passed by the House?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. The amendments reduced the amount of the credit to these various officers.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why are they making this reduction?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It was some bookkeeping account with the War Department. The War Department has approved the reduction. It is a bill that I introduced at the request of the War Department, and I have no information regarding its sale. The War Department has advised me that the changes are satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

CREDITS IN ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS ON ACCOUNT OF SURPLUS WAR SUPPLIES

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7166, to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army of the United States on account of refunds made to purchasers of surplus war supplies, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7166, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the scope of these Senate amendments?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It speaks for itself. I introduced these bills at the request of the War Department and they advised me that the Senate amendments are satisfactory.

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the unfinished business coming over from yesterday be taken up.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned yesterday the bill (S. 3936) had passed to the stage of the third reading. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3936) an act to regulate the practice of the healing art and to protect the public health in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that Lincoln's Gettysburg Address was delivered at Gettysburg, Pa., on the occasion of the dedication of the national cemetery, November 19, 1863, and is admitted to be one of the greatest orations of all time. [Reading:]

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

[Applause.]

THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, the following was taken from the Sunday's Washington Post:

There are two reasons why Congress doesn't give the people what they want: (1) It doesn't know what they want, and (2) the people don't know what they want.

"Washington is the mightiest name on earth—long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty, still mightiest in moral reformation. On that name no eulogy is expected. It can not be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name, and in its naked deathless splendor leave it shining on." (Abraham Lincoln.)

The Washington Post is the greatest in all the land and country, if bigotry and self-opinionated positions are to be taken as our guide. On it no eulogy is expected; to add intelligence to its columns or reverence to its name would culminate in a pitfall. Let no one attempt! In solemn awe let us pronounce its name. In its naked, cumbrous groveling—let it carry on. [Applause.]

RELIEF OF FARMERS, STORM AND FLOOD STRICKEN AREAS OF SOUTHEASTERN UNITED STATES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 312, a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 312

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 182, for the relief of farmers in the storm and flood stricken areas of southeastern United States. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the Senate joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the Senate joint resolution, the Senate joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the Senate joint resolution for amendment the committee shall arise and report the Senate joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the Senate joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has for its purpose the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182. The purpose of the Senate joint resolution is to authorize the Federal Government to loan $6,000,000 to the farmers in the stricken areas known as the South Atlantic States. While the resolution itself says "southeastern part of the United States," we find on account of a technical ruling by the Comptroller General's department that this designation does not cover all the States to which we desire to extend this relief; therefore the chairman of the Agricultural Committee will offer an amendment striking out "southeastern" and substituting "South Atlantic," which will cover all the States in the storm area. While personally I have never agreed with the principle embodied in this kind of loans, yet, notwithstanding, the House of Representatives and the Congress has authorized these loans on five former occasions. It authorized similar loans in 1921, 1922, 1924, 1926, and last year in 1928, although the provisions of the authorization of the last bill were not carried out on account of the failure of the appropriation bill to pass the Senate.

Thus you see bills of this character are not without precedent.

This bill provides for loaning as high as $2,000 to one man and not over $8 per acre on cotton and tobacco. As far as the Committee on Rules is concerned, this resolution comes as a unanimous report, and I understand no discussion on that report is desired at this time.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Under this the loans are to be made subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe and subject to the limitations on the amount that can be loaned to anyone on a crop?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; there are limitations, and the loans are to be made under supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLGOOD. To what extent have these farmer loans been repaid heretofore?

Mr. SNELL. They have varied from 40 to 79 per cent; but on the average about 70 per cent of the farmers' loans have been paid up to the present time. I am informed by the Secretary of Agriculture that very little more will be collected on those loans.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I inquire of the gentleman what States are to be included?

Mr. SNELL. The South Atlantic States. I understand that includes from Virginia down.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. To what sections of the Union did the former loans apply?

Mr. SNELL. There were two in the Northwest, one in the Southwest, and another one down in the Florida region.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. DEAL. Does the gentleman feel that because precedents have been established making loans of this kind the House is justified in continuing to do so?

Mr. SNELL. I have explained already that so far as I am personally concerned I have always been opposed to the principle of these loans, but the majority of the House thinks otherwise, and, of course, the majority rules. I still think the principle is wrong and we ought not to do it.

Mr. DEAL. Does the gentleman think it constitutional?

Mr. SNELL. I am not prepared to discuss that, and I do not know whether it makes any difference or not at this time, for we do not always follow the Constitution in matters of this kind.

Mr. DEAL. Does it make any difference with the gentleman whether we violate the Constitution or not?

Mr. SNELL. You might raise the constitutional question, and there would be probably just as many on one side as on the other. I notice one thing, and that is that each of the Representatives from those States that want the relief says that they are prohibited by their State constitutions from enacting such legislation in behalf of their farmers.

Mr. DEAL. I understood he said that Virginia would probably be included in these loans. I am one of the Representatives from Virginia, and I want to say that I believe it would be unconstitutional; and so far as I am concerned, I shall vote against this kind of legislation, as I always have done heretofore.

Mr. SNELL. I am in accord with the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I may say that I do not think that Virginia was mentioned as having suffered any damages in this storm.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know as it is parliamentary or not, but a Senator from the State of Virginia came over here and said it was absolutely essential that Virginia be included in this resolution. That was the reason we agreed to insert the language "South Atlantic States."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. So far as the Committee on Agriculture is concerned, there is no evidence that this storm visited any part of the State of Virginia, as I remember.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. MICHENER. Can the gentleman tell us when these respective loans were repaid?

Mr. SNELL. I shall be glad to include that information in the extension of my remarks.

On loan of 1921 to Northwest, up to January 1, 1929, 69.3 per cent had been paid.

On loan of 1922 to Northwest, up to January 1, 1929, 76.8 per cent had been paid.

On loan to New Mexico, 1924, 65.4 per cent have been paid.

On Florida loan, 1926, there has been paid 40.6 per cent.

There will be very little more collected on any of these loans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. DEAL. May I ask the gentleman what were the damages in the State of Virginia, as stated by the Senator or Representative?

Mr. SNELL. I can not go into detail as to what the Senator said, but he said it was necessary to do this for Virginia to take advantage of these loans.

Mr. DEAL. I have no evidence or knowledge of such a statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was the gentleman referring to some Senator from Virginia who came before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. SNELL. No; he came over afterwards, and said there was a mistake in the language of the original resolution as it was drawn, and asked to have that amendment made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no information that such a representation was made.

Mr. SNELL. I saw no reason for not allowing Virginia to take advantage of it, if it was so desired, and that is the reason for suggestion of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182, with Mr. HOCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 182, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 182) for the relief of farmers in the storm and flood stricken areas of southeastern United States

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1929, to make advances or loans to farmers and fruit growers in the storm and flood stricken areas of the southeastern United States where he shall find that an emergency for such assistance exists for the purchase of seed of cotton, corn, legumes, nursery stock, and vegetables crops, feed for work stock, and fertilizer, and, when necessary, to procure such seed, feed, and fertilizers and sell the same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed and fertilizer thus obtained by him for crop production. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed and fertilizer obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $3,000. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate. For carrying out the purposes of this resolution, including all expenses and charges incurred in so doing, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000,000 to be immediately available: Provided, That any person who shall knowingly make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this resolution, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out "the total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $3,000" and insert "in the case of land planted or to be planted in cotton, no loan or advance for or sale of seed and fertilizer shall exceed $8 per acre, and in the case of land planted or to be planted in other crops, no loan or advance for or sale of seed and fertilizer shall exceed $3 per acre. No loan, advance, or sale under this resolution shall, in any event, exceed $2,000 to any one person."

On page 2, line 18, after the word "such," strike out "advances or loans" and insert "advances, loans, and sales."

On page 2, line 24, after the word "of," strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides for one hour of debate, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. The Chair would like to inquire if any member of the committee desires to oppose this measure? If not, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. DEAL. Did I understand the Chair to ask if there was any member of the committee who was opposed to the resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair asked that question.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, if he is opposed to the resolution. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the committee, while there is no apparent opposition to this joint resolution it is probably proper that a statement should be made to the committee briefly outlining the facts justifying the introduction of the resolution.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture I heard the testimony of witnesses who appeared from Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, and North Carolina, as to the terrible disaster that overtook large sections of these States in the storm of September last. It was one of the most destructive visitations of this kind that has ever befallen any section of our country. Thousands of people were drowned; great sections of fine agricultural lands were overflowed; growing crops were utterly destroyed in large areas; livestock was washed away and drowned; and farm implements, houses, and all kinds of improvements on farms were destroyed. The evidence showed that the people in large areas will not be able, without assistance, to plant a crop this year, and unless this assistance is granted to them hundreds of thousands of people will have to leave their homes and go to other parts of the country to make a living for themselves and their families.

Like the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], when the proposition first came up in 1924, of making direct loans out of the Federal Treasury in matters of this kind, I was inclined to the opinion that it was not a wise thing to do, and that it was not a proper function of the Government to make direct loans to its citizens out of the Federal Treasury; but that policy has been adopted and we made loans similar to this to the stricken farmers of the Northwest, and on four or five occasions since that time similar loans have been authorized. Therefore, it seems to me it would be a grievous wrong to the splendid people in this section to our common country, who have suffered so much and who are in such dire distress, to refuse at this time to follow the precedents that have been set in the past. It may be that in the future Congress may reconsider its policy of making these loans, which would be a proper thing to do if a majority of the Congress decided it should be done.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Can the gentleman state, from his experience or from knowledge otherwise gained, what has been the effect of previous acts of this character, where we have made loans in this way? Have they proved to be beneficial to the farmers and, if so, have the loans been repaid, as a rule? What has been the result of the experience of the past?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Of all the loans that have been made—and I think there have been five—the amount repaid to the Government has averaged, on all the loans, about 70 per cent, and the effect of these loans has been to enable the farmers in large sections of the country, who otherwise would have been driven from their homes and perhaps into other avocations, to get a new start, to reestablish their homes and to continue on the farms. [Applause.] This loan of six million is to be made under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. A first lien is to be taken by the Government on the crops to be produced in the next year, and no doubt a very large proportion of these loans will be returned to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I want to say, as one member of the committee and representing the State of North Carolina, that we appreciate very highly the gentleman's attitude, and I think I can assure the gentleman and the Congress that as far as our State is concerned, instead of 70 per cent of these loans being repaid, practically 90 per cent will be repaid. I want to thank the gentleman, the Rules Committee, and the Congress for being so liberal with us in this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The estimate I made of 70 per cent was based on our experience in former loans. If we make this loan and make it now, it will give renewed encouragement to hundreds of thousands of fine American citizens to go back on their farms, to rebuild their homes, and to plant and harvest a crop. I think that if all the members of this committee could have heard the testimony that we heard before the Committee on Agriculture and the statements made by Members of the House and Senate from this section of the country before the Rules Committee, that not a single Member of this House would be opposed to this resolution.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. May I state to the gentleman also that Doctor Long, at the head of the Extension Service, made a cross-country financial survey and brought the real facts before the committee as to the situation in connection with this case?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The Committee on Agriculture had the absolute facts about the terrible loss of life, the destruction of property, and the utter hopelessness and helplessness of hundreds of thousands of American citizens to relieve themselves without this assistance.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman this question: When these loans are made, is there any record to show that such a loan has been made as a notice to subsequent creditors?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that I am not personally familiar with the rules of the department making these loans, but the interests of the Government are safeguarded in every way possible.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The idea I have in mind is that a man usually borrows money on his crop; and if he is also borrowing from the Government, then the man who lends him additional money on his crop ought to have some notice of this obligation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The law provides that the loan from the Government shall be a first lien on the crop, and, of course, that is notice to everybody.

Mr. FULMER. When it is recorded.

Mr. LINTHICUM. When it is recorded it would be notice.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, it would have to be filed and not recorded.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. And that is notice to everyone else. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if I may.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. A unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture and a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. IRWIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. Does the gentleman know what the precedent is in reference to loans made heretofore as to the rate of interest and the time of payment? I understand this bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to promulgate these rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. Can the gentleman enlighten the committee with reference to what was done in respect of the former loans to farmers, as to the matter of rates and time of loan?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Reasonable time, of course, is given. The time would have to be long enough to mature the crops. The rate of interest in all of these loans has been as much or more than the rate that the Government pays on money it borrows.

Mr. KADING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KADING. I understood the gentleman to say that our past experience in connection with loans of this kind indicates that about 70 per cent of the money is repaid to the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KADING. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to say that it was from 40 per cent to 70 per cent. Has the gentleman any definite information about that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I think it runs from about 42 per cent to 80 per cent, and the general average is around 70 per cent with respect to all the loans.

Mr. KADING. Does the gentleman know whether the reason the full amount of these loans has not been repaid is because of a failure of the security or neglect to enforce the security of the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No; it has been through no fault on the part of the Government, but there were a great many instances where farmers who borrowed money, especially in the Northwest, made a total failure in the production of the crop for which they had borrowed the money and therefore were not able to make the payment. Of course, the Government runs that chance.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. I desire to submit, partly in answer to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KADING], that the failure to pay in full, in my judgment and from what I know from the evidence submitted to the Banking and Currency Committee, was due to the deflation policy of 1920, which broke the West and the South both.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Of course, the failure to collect a good many of these loans made in the Northwest was on account of subsequent crop failures in that section of the country.

Mr. LARSEN. There will still be other collections made there.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I notice the purpose for which this money can be used is to lend to the farmers who wish to buy seeds?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Seeds and fertilizer, and in some cases equipment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What does that include?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Take, for instance, the State of South Carolina. It is just as necessary to have fertilizer in that State to make a crop of cotton or tobacco as it is to have the seed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What does the gentleman mean by "equipment"?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I, perhaps, ought not to have used that term. The main purposes are seed and fertilizer.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The purpose of the bills heretofore passed was limited to seed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. So the scope of this bill is larger than previous bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. It may be to some extent, but I think the bill is drawn along the lines of previous bills and it is drawn to meet the requirements of the people who need the money.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But this bill does include the purchase of fertilizer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. While the other bills included only seed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I just wanted to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Of course where fertilizer is absolutely required, seed would be worthless unless they had the fertilizer, and I wish to say further, in closing——

Mr. RAMSEYER. When the gentleman talks about "absolute requirements," a farmer might have to have a plow or might have to have a team.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Of course that is true.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield to me again for a minute?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. We can not produce any crops in the section of country that is taken care of by this bill without the use of fertilizer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. This resolution is justified in every way under former precedents of the House in coming to the relief of distressed and stricken sections of the country and is necessary because of the absolute helplessness of these people to help themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. KADING. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KADING. As long as this legislation provides for the farmers purchasing fertilizer and provides for a lien upon the crop, would we not start out right at the beginning without any prospect of any security for the repayment of this money where the party purchases fertilizer?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No; I will say to the gentleman there is a limitation placed on the amount per acre that can be loaned and the amount is smaller than what is usually required for seed and fertilizer. That is safeguarded. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is any opposition to the bill, I would be pleased to hear from the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am rather surprised and amazed. I feel shocked that Representatives from the Southern States should come here to-day and ask for the passage of such legislation as this. It is entirely inconsistent with the principles for which we have always stood, and it seems to me it is a breakdown on the part of our party in sustaining the principles as laid down in our Constitution. I know that it provokes a smile from some of my colleagues that we should even refer to the Constitution, because we have already changed the Constitution by establishing precedents—the modern way of changing fundamental principles. I do not wish to reflect unduly on any person. My own Democratic colleagues or gentlemen on this side of the House, but in my district, and in some portions of the South during the past campaign, the argument was used that Republicans should be elected to Congress in Democratic districts for the reason that we could then get something.

The Democrats have failed to get something, but if you would only elect a Republican we might get something.

I am wondering, because some of our Southern States fell for that idea, if our Republican friends are not offering this as a gesture for our southern districts to remain in the Republican ranks. Can it be possible that this is another indirect method of purchasing votes for a political party? I do not make that charge.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Was that the issue in the gentleman's campaign? [Laughter.]

Mr. DEAL. Yes; it was an issue.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Then we can understand how the result happened. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEAL. That was an issue, and I agree that the gentleman from Illinois is getting a chance to make good for his party.

My point is that there is no justification in the Constitution of the United States that will warrant any such legislation as this. The Federal Government ought not to be in the loan business.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Can it not be done under the general welfare clause?

Mr. DEAL. That is the only possible clause in the Constitution as an excuse for passing such legislation. This is to apply to a few individuals and not for the general welfare. My friend from North Carolina, in support of the resolution, states that the people in his State would at least return 90 per cent of the money loaned to them. Is that a warrant for a violation of the Constitution, the fundamental law of the country?

Why, my friends, we might as well go out and propose to loan to every individual, whenever he has a fire or when the roof is blown off his barn, money from the United States Treasury. If we are going to resort to this sort of legislation where will the end be? What will become of the Federal Treasury—the fundamental principles upon which all of the South has so long been proud of and upheld and sustained?

I shall oppose the bill because I do not believe that I have the right under my oath of office to support such legislation. I never have voted for this kind of legislation and probably I never will.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further request for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound an inquiry to the chairman of the committee. I have understood that this was going to include tobacco, and if it is there ought to be an amendment as to acreage.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was about to offer an amendment. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "cotton," insert the words "or tobacco."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa propose to offer another amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, there are other committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "such," strike out the words "advances or loans" and insert "advances, loans, and sales."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 1, line 6, after the word "the," strike out "southeastern United" and insert "South Atlantic."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. This will make it so clear that it can be readily understood.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute by Mr. STEAGALL for the amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 1, lines 5 and 6, after the word "of," strike out "the southeastern United States" and insert "Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the original language of the resolution applies to the southeastern United States. The question was raised as to what construction would be placed upon that language by the Comptroller General, and it was thought that the language should be changed so as to be made specific. I have offered a substitute which I am sure is acceptable to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], which names the particular States to which the appropriation shall apply. The States named in the substitute are Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, and these are the States contemplated in the legislation offered by the committee. The substitute makes the provisions of the resolution specific instead of leaving the matter open for construction.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "cotton," add "tobacco."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Alabama" in the amendment just adopted, insert "and in Orange County, N. Y., but not in excess of $25,000."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I propose is consistent with the purposes of the bill and seeks to permit the use of loans to the farmers of the black-dirt section of Orange County, N. Y., to buy seeds, as their crops have been destroyed by floods for two years in succession and they have no credit left to buy seeds for this year's planting. Hearings were held before the Committee on Agriculture, and at that time it was suggested that I offer this amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. If we agree to the gentleman's amendment, will he forego speaking on the bill?

Mr. FISH. Certainly, I will, with much pleasure. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 44, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment, to authorize an appropriation of $5,000 for Cowlitz County, in the State of Washington, where there were very heavy floods, and I would like to speak to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will kindly send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not offered in a proper way. The gentleman must send his amendment in writing to the desk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to withdraw the amendment, which was offered to call further attention to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], which has just been adopted, thoughtlessly I think. The committee is considering a Senate bill reported from the House committee with certain amendments. How easily that bill can be made unacceptable to the other body, or, for that matter, this body.

I am in fact favorable to this legislation, but I am sorry to see thrust upon it an amendment which helps some particular county only. The amendment which I undertook to offer was for the purpose of directing attention to a situation that might arise. Local amendments might be offered by dozens and be germane.

Personally, I believe that as the people of the United States begin to recognize the rapid growth of its population, and the strain and the stress of its people in various areas, and the necessity at times that certain things for internal aid and internal improvement shall be done by the Federal Government that are too big for any one State. I think as the years go by we will cease to recognize State lines so much in internal improvements, and take care of our people everywhere for the general good. All of the recent 50-50 Federal aid laws indicate that. I expect to see the day come when the Federal Government will assist the States of the southeast United States—the old South—in terracing their lands, to prevent erosion, and why not? It is our population that we are trying to take care of, and it is ever increasing. We get the example in such things as Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, the St. Lawrence River, the Columbia River Basin project, the Mississippi River flood control, and other great projects, and also in the intercoastal canal proposition from Texas to Maine. I hope the desire upon the part of all Members who study this question will be to vision the whole United States and not make legislation by counties.

I undertook to defeat the amendment. I have nothing personal in the matter. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment offered by me.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEAL: Page 2, line 9, after the word "therefor," insert "that the funds authorized to be loaned shall apply to any State or county in the Union in which disaster may occur."

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment with the idea that to some extent it might bring these proposed loans under the general welfare clause.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. DEAL. Some gentlemen have declared that it is necessary to have this legislation because the constitution in their own States prohibit them from extending the aid to their citizens, but they are willing to come to the Congress of the United States and have the Congress violate the Constitution of the United States while they refuse to violate the constitutions of their own States, a position so entirely inconsistent and, to my mind, unreasonable that it prompted me to offer this amendment so that the benefits proposed may be for the public welfare and not for localities or individuals. Let every person in every State and every county in the United States participate in the benefit, if there by any, by making it apply to all. Even so, I can find no warrant in the Constitution for such legislation. No one seems to claim that there is any; the only justification claimed is that we have heretofore enacted similar legislation—on the theory, perhaps, that precedent plus two wrongs make a right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the title so as to conform to the text.

The CHAIRMAN. That must be done in the House. If there are no further amendments——

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the last amendment insert: "$5,000 for Posey County, Ind."

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 5, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOCH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 182, had directed him to report the resolution back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I demand a separate vote on the Fish amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 24]

Anthony	Davenport	Kindred	Reed, Ark.
Bacon	Davey	King	Reed, N. Y.
Beck, Pa.	Dicksteln	Kunz	Reid, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote has been demanded on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17053, the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930; and pending that, I ask that the time be not limited, but placed at the disposal of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17053, the legislative appropriation bill; and pending that, asks unanimous consent that the general debate be not limited but be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17053, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17053, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17053) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, When I first got the news that the Federal Reserve was again mussing around in waters beyond its depth there came flashing through my mind the familiar quotation "How long, O Lord, how long?" And now cometh a resolution from the Senate asking the Federal Reserve to recommend remedies for the prevention of speculation. I don't believe the blind can lead the blind.

American people have proverbially short memories and they are as fickle in their moods as some grand opera tenor or mezzo-soprano; but I just can not forget that there are a lot of tragedies in amateur finance that have followed some of the policies of the Federal Reserve. We seem to have forgotten about the deflation period they brought about at the close of the war, and one of the big chiefs, Peake, who was the advocate and leader, reappeared as the farm leader with the McNary-Haugen equalization fee on his collar and $750,000 in his pocket, according to the papers, as a contribution from the Democratic National Committee, in order to prove to the farmers of the Middle West—many of whom he had ruined by his deflation policies, that he was still their leader. Time and again this little body of political appointees, called the Federal Reserve, dependent for their appointment too largely upon service to party rather than on outstanding ability in economics and financial problems, have gone far afield with their patent-medicine policies to cure evils it was not their function to cure.

We are all on some sucker list. It may not be stocks or bonds or real estate. It may not be oils or mines or patents. But somewhere along the line all the children of all the ages have had to have their fingers burned in order to teach them that speculation has its travails, has its worries, its trials and its tribulations; that along the financial ocean of speculation are the multitude of wrecks who have pursued the goddess of fortune. But you can not cure by legislation or by the exercise of arbitrary power by Government bureaucracies a tendency ingrained in all of us. Morals can not be legislated into people, and certainly no bureaucratic agency of government is going to kill the speculative bug that is inherent in all of us. Go to the surrogate courts and see the line of good-for-nothing stocks that have been exchanged for hard-earned money, sometimes from people of alleged smartness, bankers, lawyers, because they had been hypnotized into believing they were smarter than somebody else at his own game, and that the good Lord was going to give them something for nothing. Even the mail of Senators and Congressmen demonstrates they are on somebody's sucker list. If the Federal Reserve can continue to exercise arbitrary power and influence the ups and downs of the market, it is the greatest get-rich body in its possibilities in the world.

Of course, the Government must do everything possible to protect its people, but if it was the duty of the Federal Reserve to intrude in Wall Street, it was also its duty to stop the speculation in Florida real estate that has left its trail of hardship for multitudes and the boom in Texas real estate and oil; and all along the line one false step necessarily follows another until the tragic end. We all abhor gambling in principle, and yet are willing to take a chance on many things that the cold, hard-reasoning processes and bitter experience warn us against.

I believe the Government and we in Congress have erred in creating too many of these ultraaristocratic bureaucracies; that our States have supinely yielded of their powers, and have been recreant in their duties through blue sky laws and through vigilance of public servants in preventing frauds and making every issue of stock pass the searching scrutiny of fearless public servants; but their inactivity does not justify the superactivity of a politically appointed board, not even the Federal Reserve. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, during the Seventieth Congress I have been a member of one of the most important committees of this House—the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee has about finished its work for this Congress, and I want to say that through a 6-year membership in the House and through many years of observation and study of the Indian question, I think the record of that committee during this Congress equals, if not excels, the work of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House in any Congress concerning which I have had information.

During this Congress I have represented in the House as many Indians, if not more Indian people, than any other Member of the Congress. In the district which I represent there live Cherokees, Osages, Pawnees, Quapaws, Creeks, Senecas, Wyandottes, Delawares, Shawnees, and others in smaller number representing other tribes. I have lived among the American Indians in Oklahoma for the last 40 years. I have been their neighbor. I have tried to be their friend.

But, Members of the House, there is throughout the land too great a misunderstanding as to the American Indian. To many people, when a question of Indian legislation or Indian interest is under consideration, the Indian as they see him is a human being sitting in a tepee somewhere, smoking a pipe and waiting for rations and a per capita payment.

As to the Indians of Oklahoma, let me say to the House and to the people that that is entirely a wrong impression. In every case where they have had proper opportunity they have made good. The Indians of Oklahoma have been and are amongst our very best citizens.

They are not as a whole a people who are sitting around waiting for per capita payments or who are looking for annuities from the Government. They have played an important part in building up the great State of Oklahoma, occupying positions in the judiciary, positions in the State government, and making themselves felt in the Halls of Congress, on this side of the Capitol through Mr. CARTER and Mr. HASTINGS, and over in the Senate through Senator Owen. But with all that, Mr. Chairman, there has been, to my mind, one neglect of the Indian, to which I am going to call attention.

Before doing so, however, I want to refer again to my remarks about the great work that was done in this Congress by the Committee on Indian Affairs. We have, in the legislation which has been given study and which has been presented to this House, provided additional and necessary means, so far as the limits would permit, of taking care of the education of the Indian. We have provided for greater care of his health and we have undertaken, where necessary, to throw more provisions around the protection of his property. All of these things the Congress should be commended for. But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the last few months there has been given much study to the Indian question throughout the country, and it has been discovered that while we have done all these things for the Indian we have overlooked one thing necessary for the emancipation and for the betterment of the American Indian, and that thing is this: That while we have been taking care of his health, while we have been taking care of his education, and while we have been protecting his property we have not taken steps, either through the action of Congress or the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to find employment for the unemployed Indian of America and thus help him through his own labor and efforts to better his condition and make himself self-sustaining. So with that idea in mind I am to-day introducing a bill providing that there shall be immediately instituted in the Bureau of Indian Affairs a system, particularly applied to that bureau, for seeking and finding employment for the Indian and placing the Indian wards of the Government in employment, where they will not only be benefited by the remuneration received from that employment but by the conditions that come about from being placed in touch, so to speak, with the outer world. In that connection I want to ask the Clerk, if I may have the permission, to read in my time an editorial appearing in the Washington Post of this date.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the editorial.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

LET THE INDIANS WORK

If there is any one thing that the American heart would rather do than another, it seems that thing is to bleed because of the plight of the red man. Now and again some accuser appears to point the finger of condemnation at the Government because some one has been told out West that weevils were found in the flour at an Indian agency, or that some son of a proud chieftain has been required to hoe potatoes on an Indian boarding school farm for two whole hours right out in the sun. The self-appointed guardians of the Indians hasten to seize their snickersnees and battle to avenge these outrages.

But occasionally one appears to speak of the Indian in terms of practical common sense. In Sunday's Post appeared an article by William Atherton Du Puy, in which, as an Indian commentator, he seems to have spoken quite out of character. He introduces an idea heretofore quite foreign to the Indian idyl. He suggests that the red man go to work.

It has been shown, it seems, that the mass of Indians are tragically poor. They live in hovels on isolated reservations, are insufficiently nourished, and, consequently, unable to resist disease. Health conditions are bad, and the death rate is high. The reformers blame the Government. They cry for more doctors and more hospitals. They quite miss the fundamentals of the case, according to Mr. Du Puy. They do not seem to appreciate the fact that the Indian's plight is caused by poverty, and that the only permanent remedy lies in alleviating the poverty. The way to banish poverty in the case of the Indian is exactly the same as in the case of the white man, the Chinaman, or the Negro. It is to give him work to do at which he can earn a competence.

The Indian on the reservation is idle. His old manner of life is gone, and few reservations offer him an opportunity to earn a living. It is out in a workaday world which cries for skilled and unskilled labor that opportunity lies. It is in working that any individual has his best opportunity. There is a job for every Indian in America. If Indian emotionalists would concentrate on establishing these wards of the Government as wage earners, they would right most of the Indians' wrongs and solve the Indian problem.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to commend for your study the article by Mr. Du Puy referred to, and, in addition to that, I want to say that I agree with the editorial just read. Of course, I do not admit, and it is not true, that the Indian will not work if he has an opportunity. The Indian, so far as working is concerned, is an individual who is awaiting the opportunity to work. But what is the condition, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as to that? His former environments and his former treatment by the Government in issuing rations and per capita payments have so placed him that, unlike others, he has not been accustomed to seeking employment. He is timid in approaching employers; and while he is anxious to work, he needs the helping hand that my bill provides for him in order that he may secure employment.

Now, what is the further situation? In the district I represent we have two Indian schools. These schools are maintained by the Government, and may I say here that none of the charges that have been heralded over the country relative to the treatment of the Indians in Indian schools are true, so far as those schools are concerned.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. And that statement is practically true of the Indian schools the country over, is it not?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. So far as my knowledge goes. But what are we doing? Go to these schools and you will find bright-faced boys and girls who have been brought out of their homes by the Government for the purpose of training and educating them. The girls are trained in domestic science work and other lines, and the boys are trained in some of the trades, in farming, dairying, and other things of that kind. When they reach a certain age, what happens? They go out of school; they have that timidity which does not permit them to approach employers in order to secure work, so that many of them go back to the places from whence they came, with their education and their training being of little benefit to them.

Now, what do I propose in this bill? I propose that we make an appropriation of $25,000 and that it be spent in Oklahoma, where the Indian is in a position that he can be handled in this way, that we use this money for the purpose of hiring experienced persons to go amongst the employers and seek employment for these Indian wards. As illustrative, the railroads employ many men in lines of work that these Indians could do, no doubt, were their attention called to the situation. Many of them could be placed on railroad and other public work, taking the place of Mexicans now imported into this country for that purpose. In addition, it is highly probable that many places could be found for them, both boys and girls, upon the farms, where they could be further trained and beneficial to their employers. Many of the girls come out of the schools partially equipped for rendering valuable service, not only in the home but in industry, and would prove valuable employees if only given an opportunity. No doubt there are many employers in Oklahoma and elsewhere who would give these people a chance were their attention only called to it by some one vested with the power to bring the employer and employee together. This system has worked to mutual benefit and to the benefit of all through Government and State employment agencies now being maintained. Of course, it may be argued that these people could benefit by the agencies already established. This they might do to some extent, but under conditions that exist it is my opinion that a separate and distinct agency, looking only after the interest of these Indians, would be more beneficial and is necessary.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. About how many Indian boys and girls would be served by this legislation?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Well, there are in Oklahoma about 13,000 restricted Indians. The Indian families are about the average, so that the gentleman can figure that himself. In the school at Wyandotte there are 256 boys and girls at this time, and in the school at Pawnee, in my district, there are about 157 on the roll.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman's bill, as I understand it, would afford the follow up of assistance that is essential in permitting them to get into the life current of actual business?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes. If I may answer the gentleman, I would do with them just exactly as Oklahoma does with her orphan-home children, where we have agents continually finding homes and employment for those children as they are discharged from the homes.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman is perfectly right in that position.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman knows my sympathy with the Indians. I am wondering if there has been any percentage, be the percentage small or large, that have gone out from these schools into homes or into business, or have they had any opportunity at all in that regard.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that if there has been one I do not know of it. But let me say further to the gentleman——

Mr. HUDSON. Let me follow that practical question with another question. If that is true, how will the overhead supervision filter them out into the various walks of life?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. By finding places for them; by going to the homes, going to the farmers, going to the employers of labor, and pointing out they are in need of employment and asking them to give them a try out.

Mr. GARBER. Just like the employment agencies throughout the country do for the white people?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes; and supervise it so as to keep in touch with the Indians. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON] that the main trouble the Indian has in seeking employment is that he has not been in the habit of doing that and is handicapped by not knowing where to seek employment and in the lack of knowledge as to the proper way in which to present his case to an employer.

Let me say further there are hundreds of Indians in Oklahoma who, when necessity has forced them, have gone out to work and when they did work have made good and faithful employees. I think a step of this kind, which would put them in the workaday world and connect them with commerce and trade, is a greater step than any we have ever taken through issuing them rations or per capita payments.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I apprehend there is much merit in what the gentleman is presenting, for with respect to the Indian school at Mount Pleasant, I know it is true that the boys and girls come there and get the technique of domestic science and other similar work and the technique of mechanics, but invariably they go back without making any contribution and without filtering themselves into the life of the community. If this plan of the gentleman can succeed, it will be a great forward step in the handling of the Indian problem.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. May I say to the gentleman that what he says is also true of orphan homes or other institutions of that kind, where the children are educated within the home. They do not mingle with the outside world and too often, when they are turned out, a lack of knowledge of the world makes them failures in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in addition to the argument I have tried to make relative to the necessity of finding employment for these Indians, I want to call attention to some excerpts relative to the question in a recent report made by the American Institute for Government Research. In commenting on the necessity of finding employment for the Indian wards of the Government the report said:

> A specialist in vocational guidance and placement to aid Indians to find employment in white communities is very necessary and is recommended.

Then, in addition to that, and in commenting on it further, they said:

> The Indian Service must seek to find suitable employment off the reservation for Indians who have no real chance there or who desire to seek other employment. In some instances, as in the Navajo country, the situation can be met in part by securing them more land; but, in general, the solution lies in an intelligent employment service. In developing an employment service the Indian Office will have to supply the motive force and the directing brains and in some jurisdictions full-time employment workers, but much can be achieved through establishment of cooperative relationships with existing labor-placing organizations. Fortunately—and I want to impress this upon you—the evidence tends to show that the Indians make good workers in industrial pursuits. Their main difficulty lies in making the initial contacts and in pressing for recognition and advancement.

Then, further commenting, it says:

> The Indian Service must attempt to place the Indians who leave school and help them to become established in productive enterprises, either on the reservation or in white communities. It must be prepared to enter in cooperative arrangements with employers, so that boys and girls shall have opportunity to gain experience in commercial employment while still having some official connection with the school.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is to carry out these recommendations that I have introduced in the Congress a bill authorizing an appropriation of $25,000 for the coming fiscal year to carry on this experiment, and if it is a good thing, make it permanent, extending its operations to all Indian wards of the Government.

The necessity exists. It is recommended by everyone who has given study to the question, and I press and urge, in the name of our duty to the American Indian as his guardian, that legislation which I have introduced and am asking for be given the right of way and the Indians be given that consideration, the need of which I have pointed out, to which he is entitled and which is necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked this time this afternoon to discuss for a little while what is known as the Dale retirement bill, or Senate 1727.

This bill was reported out of the Committee on the Civil Service to the House on May 10, 1928. It received a unanimous report from that committee. On May 23, 1928, the Rules Committee reported out a rule for its consideration, and I understand that report was unanimous.

That was May 23, 1928, not quite a year ago, and yet that rule is still in suspension before this Congress. The other day we considered and passed a bill known as the Norbeck game refuge bill, a bill that provided for the expenditure of $75,000, then $200,000, then $600,000, and the fourth year $1,000,000, and the fifth year $1,000,000. I was in favor of that legislation. There evidently was a great demand for it all over the country. It was to provide a refuge for the birds of this country.

This Senate bill is a refuge bill for human kind, and while perhaps we are not flooded with letters of men and women, men who write "While I very seldom shoot, although I own a gun, I am for the bill," it is not forced to our attention by sportsmen all over the country and by women organizations and by clubs, yet it is brought to our attention by those who have been confronted with this the urgent need of legislation by hundreds and thousands of men and women who have served their lifetime as servants of this great people. They are out now in the eventide of their life upon the bare hills of necessity.

This is a measure not for a game refuge that will provide better hunting for men of leisure, a bill to propagate song birds, but one which will preserve in the hearts of women and men their songs in their late life.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Is it true that this legislation is refused action by the House because of a protest of the Director of the Budget and the President of the United States?

Mr. HUDSON. I can not say as to that; I have not heard any such report.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then how does the gentleman account for the fact that although this is a unanimous report from the committee, and a unanimous report from the Rules Committee, that the rule has been held up since last May? Who held it up?

Mr. HUDSON. I would like to turn about and ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. My understanding is that the President of the United States is holding up this bill. The gentleman says he has heard no such report?

Mr. HUDSON. Let me answer the question. I do not believe it is true.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And again I ask the gentleman, who is holding it up?

Mr. HUDSON. I do not know that there is anybody holding it up.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Perhaps the chairman of the Rules Committee could tell the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSON. I want before touching that matter, to discuss the legislation. Is it a matter of gratuity? Are we looking upon it in the same attitude of mind that we might look upon legislation that my colleague from Oklahoma just addressed you about, or my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] who might come in and ask for a gratuity for certain groups of Indians? The bill before us, the bill that the Rules Committee reported out, is a matter of justice to the employees of the Federal Government in the years that are past and the years that are to come.

I want to say to my colleagues this afternoon that when the retirement legislation was enacted it was not as a gratuity to the employees, but as a matter of economy, efficiency, and a money-saving measure to the American Government. I do not think any one of us will question that.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Just a moment. If that is true, I ask my colleagues on this side of the House why we can not have a right to vote upon the question before us. I am not within the inner circle of the steering committee. I follow them because I believe in their judgment and wisdom, but I believe the time has come—while there may have been some reason for withholding action on the rule up to this time, I believe the time has come when that action is no longer justifiable and we ought to have the rule brought before us and the legislation taken under consideration. [Applause.]

I thought that would meet with applause on that side. I am not trying to convert you; I am trying to convert this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think every member of the Rules Committee is enthusiastically for the bill. I wonder if my colleague is confident that if the House and the Senate unanimously passed this bill it would become a law?

Mr. HUDSON. I feel it would.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman does not feel very certain about that, does he?

Mr. HUDSON. I have no reason to feel otherwise.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes; if it will help any to pass this proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that when the Rules Committee votes a rule out, it is the duty of the chairman of that committee to bring that rule on the floor in a reasonable time? Is not that a fact under the rules of the House?

Mr. HUDSON. I am not going to say what the duties of the chairman of the Rules Committee are.

Mr. BLANTON. We have the chairman of the Rules Committee now in a place where he can not talk.

Mr. HUDSON. He is a gentleman of wisdom and of skill and of diplomacy. I apprehend that he will bring the rule out when he feels it is time to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not answer the question. Is it not his duty to bring that rule out within a reasonable time?

Mr. WOODRUFF. It certainly is not his duty to bring it out on the floor if he feels that by so doing he will defeat the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember what Phil. Campbell did when he pocketed several rules. The gentleman will remember what the Kansas Republicans did to him at the next election.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; and I do not deny but that the Kansas Republicans were justified in their action, but, on the other hand, I will say to my friend from Texas, that the reason for withholding that resolution, in my opinion, is not the reason for not reporting the rule under consideration.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] what is the reason?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I can give only my personal opinion.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And what is that?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I imagine that I agree with my friend from Texas on that, that there is some question in the minds of those interested in this legislation as to whether or not it would meet with the approval of the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then, after the Congress has had a unanimous report from one committee and a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, and word is then sent from the other end of the Avenue that the gentleman there will not approve it, Congress must refrain from going further with the legislation? Is that the policy that is to obtain, so far as the other end of the Avenue is concerned?

Mr. HUDSON. I would not think that that would be the policy, but if it were it would appear to be a wise policy.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we have been known to pass bills over vetoes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And that is the reason the gentleman does not get anywhere, because he acquiesces in whatever is done by the leaders of his party, whether they be right or wrong.

Mr. HUDSON. The country seems to think that we have gone along wisely, and they have intrusted the reins of government to our party for another eight years. I can not yield any further.

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that the Committee on Rules and the steering committee have acted wisely up to this time, with the great pressure of legislation upon the committee, with the view of the whole legislative program before it, which no one individual Member has.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. In just a moment. They act within wisdom as to the time when legislation, no matter how meritorious, shall be brought before the House. I am not criticizing the Rules Committee nor the steering committee of this House for not having brought the legislation before us up to this time. I do not want to be placed in that attitude. I am here this afternoon to study the merits of the question, and I say that I believe now the time has come when we ought to have a chance to consider the legislation. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman indicated that the House should follow the Chief Executive. Why not advocate the abolition of Congress and save the people a good many hundreds of thousands of dollars, if Congress is to be only a rubber stamp for the man at the other end of the Avenue?

Mr. HUDSON. If Congress can save the people any more millions of dollars than the titular head of the party has saved them, it will do a good job.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's attitude, but I would like to use my sympathy in a more practical way. I ask the gentleman to suggest a plan whereby we can get this legislation before the House. If he will, we will be happy to cooperate with him over here.

Mr. HUDSON. I am sure the gentleman from New York knows a plan whereby it can be gotten before the House as well as does the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BOYLAN. But I yield to the gentleman from Michigan on account of seniority of service and greater experience, and I am willing to follow him.

Mr. HUDSON. And the gentleman may have an opportunity possibly to do that. I hope he will, when the vote is cast, anyway, and I am sure he will.

I want to discuss for a moment just what this means. We are thinking about a drain upon the Treasury of the United States in this, but as I said a moment ago, this legislation is a matter of justice. We entered into this agreement providing for retirement at a certain age, because we said that we might save on the expenditure of the Government.

And if that is true, then we have all the more obligation to see that the retirement amount at the time of retirement is not starvation alms.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HUDSON. This retirement proposition is very clear to anyone who will study it for a few minutes and pay no attention to statements which cloud the issue and have no basis in fact.

In January, 1925, the Government actuary, Mr. McCoy, in quoting from the report of the board of actuaries made this statement:

> The total salaries of those retired was $15,825,000. The total expenditures for new employees, promotions, and annuities was $14,945,000, which would leave a saving to the Government of $880,000, even if they had paid the entire cost of the retirement.

Now, bear in mind that during this year the employees contributed $17,000,000 and you can see the tremendous profit to the Government.

This ratio still holds good.

The so-called increase of 1926 was borne entirely by the employees.

We thought we did a very good thing. We patted ourselves on the back and said, "We have increased the retirement sum," and then turned around and said, "You come across with an additional 1 per cent deduction from your salary," and the people in the employ of the departments of the Government paid the increase and not the Government.

Mr. O'CONNELL. The gentleman states the exact fact.

Mr. HUDSON. The increase from 2½ to 3½ per cent in the deductions from the salaries of the employees not only paid the entire cost of the so-called "liberalization" but reduced the Government's liability by some $29,000 a year.

The real facts are that the longer this retirement legislation is held up the more money the Government loses.

I want to insert here a statement of various municipal retirement laws:

In the following comparison it will be noted that the systems are all contributory, except that of Detroit, Mich., which is noncontributory. Five out of the eight cities listed have voluntary retirement at age 60, two at age 55, and one with no stipulated age requirement.

Pittsburgh, Pa., has voluntary retirement at age 60, with 20 years' service requirement.

The maximum annuity is $1,200, and the contribution of the employee is 2½ per cent of his salary, or a maximum of $6 a month.

In Boston there is compulsory retirement at age 70, with voluntary at age 60, with no stipulated service requirement. The maximum annuity, after 15 years' service, is one-half of the average salary received during the last five years. The minimum annuity after 15 years' service is $480.

The employee's contribution is 4 per cent of salary.

Baltimore, Md., has a system similar to that of Boston.

San Francisco has voluntary retirement at ages 60 and 62, with 30 years and 10 years' service, respectively.

The minimum annuity is $450.

The employee's contribution, based on age and sex, varies from 2.87 per cent of salary to a little over 6 per cent.

In Chicago the retirement age is 55, with at least 10 years' service.

The maximum annuity is $1,800.

The employee contributes 3.25 per cent of salary.

In Philadelphia the voluntary retirement age is 60, with 20 years' service requirement.

The maximum annuity is $1,200.

The employee's contribution is 4 per cent, with maximum of $4 a month.

New York City's new retirement law, enacted April 7, 1928, allows voluntary retirement at age 55 years; there is compulsory retirement at age 70.

The employee contributes from 3 to 8 per cent, according to group, age, and sex. The service requirement is 20 years.

Detroit, Mich., has a system which is noncontributory. The city pays the entire expense. There is a service requirement of 25 years, with no stipulated age. However, if an employee has reached the age of 70 years he may retire, provided he has had 15 years' service.

The maximum annuity is $900.

There is no contribution by employee.

I bring to your attention also the retirement systems of a few out of the many private banking and industrial concerns who have adequate retirement systems.

Bankers Trust Co., of New York, have voluntary retirement at age 60 after 15 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000. Employee's contribution is 3 per cent of salary.

The First National Bank, of New York, has a similar system, the employees contributing 5 per cent of their salaries.

Speyer & Co., New York, allow voluntary retirement at age 60 with a service requirement of 25 years. The annuity is 75 per cent of salary for the past 10 years and the contribution of the employee is 2 and 3 per cent.

The Guaranty Trust Co. has a voluntary retirement at age of 65 after 15 years' service; or no age after 45 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000. The contribution of the employee is from 2 per cent to 35/50 of average pay the last three years.

The Prudential Life Insurance Co. allows retirement at age 65 after 25 years' service. The annuity is $150 a month, and the employee contributes 1 per cent of his average pay for the last 10 years.

Morris & Co. allow voluntary retirement at age 55 after 15 years' service. The annuity is 2½ per cent of final salary, the contribution of employees being 3 per cent of salary received.

The Union Trust Co., New York, has voluntary retirement at age 65 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000, the employee's contribution being 1 per cent of average salary for five consecutive years of highest pay.

The First National Bank of Chicago allows optional retirement at age 60 after 15 years' service, the employee's contribution being 3 per cent of salary. The annuity is 33/50 of salary.

Fairbanks, Morse & Co. have voluntary retirement at age 60 with 20 years' service requirement. There is a maximum annuity of $4,000. Employee contributes 3 per cent of salary.

Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. allow retirement at age 65 after 15 years' service, with a maximum annuity of $1,500. The employee contributes 3 per cent of salary.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. have voluntary retirement at ages 60 and 55 with 30 and 25 years of service required. The minimum annuity is $360. There is no contribution by employees.

The Western Electric Co. has a similar system.

The Consolidated Gas Co., New York, allows retirement at age 50 or over after 25 years' service, and the annuity is from 20 to 60 per cent of salary. There is no contribution by employees.

The Niagara Falls Light & Power Co. has voluntary retirement at age 65, with 10 years' service. The annuity is $1,000. There is no contribution by the employees.

The Southern California Edison Co. allows retirement at age 60, with 20 years' service. The minimum annuity is $300. There is no contribution by the employees.

Butler Bros. have retirement age of 60 after 20 years' service, with maximum annuity of $1,000. The employee does not contribute.

The Commonwealth Edison Co. retires at ages 55, 60, and 65, with 30, 15, and 5 years' service requirements, respectively. The maximum annuity is $5,000. There is no contribution by the employee.

The United Cigar Stores retire at age 60 after 25 years' service. Maximum annuity is $200 a month. The employee does not contribute.

The Otis Elevator Co. retires at age 60, with 20 years' service, with a maximum annuity of $125 a month. The American Smelting & Refining Co. has a similar system, with maximum annuity of $3,000.

Swift & Co., the Western Union Telegraph Co., Procter & Gamble all retire at age 60, with 25 years' service, 20 years, and no stipulated service requirement, respectively. Procter & Gamble's maximum annuity is $1,800. There is no contribution by employee.

The Westinghouse Airbrake Co. have voluntary retirement at age 65, with no stipulated service requirement. The maximum annuity is $100 a month. The employee does not contribute.

The Equitable Life Insurance Co. retires at age 65, with 10 years' service. The maximum annuity is $3,600.

The Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. allow retirement at age 60, with 25 years' service. The annuity is $1,200. Employees contribute 1 per cent of salary received for the last 10 years.

The Wilson Packing Co. has a retirement age of 55 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000, and the employees contribute 2 per cent of salary.

The Crabe Co. allows voluntary retirements at age 60 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $125 a month. Employees contribute 2 per cent of salary received for last five years.

The Murphy Varnish Co. has voluntary retirement at age 60 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $2,400, and the employee contributes 2 per cent of average salary for last 10 years.

The total amount of money contributed, plus earned interest, by the civil-service employees to the retirement fund from the date the law became effective to June 30, 1928, was $155,099,256.96.

The total disbursements from the retirement fund on account of annuities and refunds from the date the law became effective until June 30, 1928, was $73,032,110.76.

Up to July 1, 1928, all disbursements from the retirement fund were from the moneys contributed by the employees.

For the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the employees will contribute $25,932,000, and the earned interest on the fund for the present fiscal year will be $4,042,670, or a total contribution on the part of the employees of $29,974,670.

The United States Government has contributed to the fund in the present fiscal year $19,950,000, so the total receipts for the present fiscal year will be $49,924,670.

The estimated disbursements from that fund for the present fiscal year will be $17,996,000.

The net gain in the retirement fund during the present fiscal year would therefore be $31,928,670.

The total actual cash reserve on June 30, 1929, would be $113,995,816.20.

I want to come back to the fact that the time is rapidly slipping away. Three weeks left and there are hundreds of thousands of these men and women who have served and served faithfully and to whom you say, "Step aside," and they are trying to live on less than an average of $700 a year. You pay house rent, pay taxes upon a little home, if you should be so fortunate enough to get one, and buy bread and clothes, why there is nothing left. What does it mean if we pass this? It means but a small amount added to the cost, probably figuring up to a million dollars or a little more. If we can vote away two or three millions dollars to buy cut-over lands for the benefit of conservation we can afford to expend a million dollars for the conservation of human life. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HUDSON. I will ask for two minutes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say it will only cost an average of $1,000,000 on the part of the Government if we pass the retirement bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Probably a little over a million dollars if we make the step-up $100.

Mr. SNELL. The present bill step-up is $200.

Mr. HUDSON. The average in yearly pay is slightly more than $700, and the legislation provided would not bring an increase of $100.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman does not agree with the statement put out by his own committee that it would cost probably $10,000,000 a year?

Mr. HUDSON. No; I would not agree to that. The fact of the matter is that——

Mr. SNELL. I am discussing the facts put out by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. HUDSON. No; I am not on the Civil Service Committee now. The facts are with the present interest if the Government had begun to pay its share of cost of the retirement proposition at the beginning the interest on the fund would pay all the expense of the annuity.

Mr. SNELL. We have to pay the interest some day.

Mr. HUDSON. You have a balance at 30 years.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman believe we should get the information as to the retirement fund out of the actuaries of the insurance companies? Where are we to go unless we take those statements?

Mr. HUDSON. It has been proven over and over again that the estimates brought by the actuaries before the committee were so far above actual expenditures that they were not worthy of whole-hearted consideration.

Mr. SNELL. I am glad to know that that has been proved.

Mr. HUDSON. That has been proved by the figures given.

Mr. SNELL. But I did not know of any place where I could get information from others as to where they have got the information. It seems to me your committee ought to have done it. Your statement does not harmonize with the statement made to the public by the committee.

Mr. HUDSON. I do not want to take the time to read those figures, but the fact of the matter is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HUDSON. Just one minute more to answer the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HUDSON. The actuaries made the estimate, for instance, that it would take $4,178,500 of expenditures for the first year. As a matter of fact it cost $2,000,000. If you take that as a basis there is not much reliability as to how their estimates work out. In order to answer questions that might have been asked by the Committee of the Whole, I have placed the discussion in the form of questions and answers, and will insert them in connection with my remarks. They are as follows:

Q. What is the accrued liability which the actuaries mention in their estimates as a Government cost?—A. It is the amount drawn from the fund by the retired employees who have not had an opportunity to pay into the fund for 30 years.

Q. Then it is a constantly decreasing liability?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the amount at present?—A. 3.7 per cent.

Q. How long will this continue?—A. Until the law has been in effect 30 years.

Q. Is there an offset for this?—A. Yes; the Efficiency Bureau estimates the saving to the Government through increased efficiency of about 6 per cent.

Q. Then this is a money-saving investment for the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. What will be the cost to the Government after the accrued liability is disposed of?—A. 1.18 per cent.

Q. And the cost to the employees?—A. 3.5 per cent.

Q. Will the saving of 5 or 6 per cent because of increased efficiency continue?—A. Yes.

Q. Then for an investment of 1.18 per cent the Government saves 5 or 6 per cent?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe it will ever cost the Government 1.18 per cent?—A. No; because more than one-half of all employees ask for extensions, and that practically eliminates the Government cost.

Q. Do you really believe the Government will really save money in passing this bill?—A. I do.

Q. What will be the total cost at the present time?—A. The Pension Office, which administers the fund, estimates it would raise the average annuity from $733, at present, to slightly more than $800. Even estimating a $100 increase, the cost would not be large. There are 15,000 now on the retired list, and a $100 increase would mean a total cost of $1,500,000.

Q. Out of the fund?—A. Yes.

Q. The Government about one-fourth and the employees three-fourths?—A. Approximately.

Q. Since the retirement has been in operation since May 22, 1920, has there been any information compiled by any bureau of the Government as to the benefits derived on account of the retirement law?—A. Yes. The Civil Service Commission made a report on this in August, 1922, which bears testimony from heads of substantially all departments of the service. This testimony shows a very big improvement in the service.

Q. How many employees come under the retirement law?—A. About 400,000.

Q. If this bill becomes law, would it be necessary to make an extra appropriation at this time?—A. No. There was no appropriation made for seven years after the present law went into effect. At that time there was in the retirement fund many times the amount estimated by the actuaries. I believe enough is being appropriated at the present time to more than take care of this bill. Of course, we need a bill which is what many are fond of referring to as "actuarily sound." We also need sound actuaries.

Q. How much is there in the retirement fund now?—A. More than $100,000,000.

Q. How much do the contributions of the employees amount to annually?—A. More than $28,000,000—contributions and interest.

I want now to make this final appeal. If it is worth while for this great Government to go out and build 15 more cruisers for peace, it is worth while to go out and spend $2,000,000, or even $5,000,000, in order that there may be peace in the hearts and lives of these women and men whom we have separated from their employment. [Applause.]

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] was promised to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, now that other Members have come in, I will withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SNELL). The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, at times it becomes necessary for a Member of the House to invoke the machinery provided in the rules of the House to ascertain whether or not a judge of the Federal court has been guilty of crimes and misdemeanors to warrant his impeachment. We have a situation in the southern district of New York so bad that it has shocked both the bench and the bar; so bad that it is reflecting on the integrity of that court; and unless we have an investigation either to ascertain the truth of these charges or otherwise, the people of that district will lose confidence in that court.

With the permission of the House I will read the resolution which I am now introducing:

House Resolution 320

Whereas it appears that there have been grave irregularities in connection with the administration of justice by Francis A. Winslow, a Federal judge in and for the southern district of New York; and

Whereas there have recently appeared in the public press news articles showing the repeated appointments and favors received by one Marcus Helfand, an attorney in New York City, and that an intimate friendship has grown up between the said Judge Francis A. Winslow and the said Marcus Helfand, and that the said judge has been the willing recipient of favors, tokens, and other considerations from the said Helfand; and

Whereas many members of the bar in New York claim that in order to receive favorable action in cases they have before said Judge Winslow they must retain said Marcus Helfand as coattorney or special counsel because of his influence with said Judge Winslow, pointing to the almost unbroken line of favorable rulings and decisions he has obtained, all of which have given rise to the general rumor and impression among members of the bar and the public of unjudicial, unfair, and improper conduct on the part of the said Judge Winslow; and

Whereas the said Judge Winslow has made repeated appointments of a small group of men to receiverships and special masters, which group in turn appoints to other positions persons closely associated with said Judge Winslow either by ties of marriage, previous business relationship, or personal favor, constituting said group into a ring which, through its commonly known connections and influence with said Judge Winslow has harassed legitimate business and has depleted with excessive expenses and fees, all approved by said Judge Winslow, bankrupt estates, thereby preventing legitimate creditors from obtaining their just distributive share of the estate, all of which seems to be known among the members of the bar and the public in said southern district of New York; and

Whereas included in this ring is one David Steinhardt, indicted for shortage in his accounts as receiver and for larceny and who is now a fugitive from justice, who was repeatedly appointed by the said Francis A. Winslow as receiver, notwithstanding that he had not properly accounted in many estates previously intrusted to him by the said Judge Winslow; and

Whereas in many bankruptcy proceedings the said Judge Francis A. Winslow was improperly influenced by the said Marcus Helfand and other members of his favored group and ruled improperly by reason of such influence to the detriment of creditors and the proper administration of justice; and——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman right there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would rather finish reading this first.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman now offering this as formal charges of impeachment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. That is why I asked leave to read it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just wanted to ascertain the gentleman's attitude. He said he was now offering articles of impeachment. I do not think that can be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am reading my resolution calling for an investigation, for the information of the House. My resolution continues:

Whereas there has been severe criticism of the conduct of said Judge Winslow upon the bench, this criticism including the harassing of attorneys, the intimidation of witnesses, the conduct of a case in such a manner as to prejudice a jury in favor of one of the parties, the refusal to permit the stenographer to make a complete record of the case, and of altering the record after the stenographer has made a transcript, all of which tending to the miscarriage of justice and conduct reprehensible in a judicial officer; and

Whereas there has been frequent criticism of the manner in which said Judge Winslow has handled cases affecting large corporations, especially his action in the Interborough Rapid Transit 7-cent fare case, when he signed an order restraining the State courts from considering this matter, the order being signed at his home in another city than that in which the court for the southern district of New York was located or the city where the actions were to be heard, without an opportunity of familiarizing himself with all of the facts in the case and before he could have had an opportunity to ascertain the merits of the application for the said order and being signed at night only a few hours before the State court was to hear argument, and being signed after the district judge before whom the matter properly came had refused to consider the application for an injunction; and

Whereas prompted by improper motives and considerations, among which was the sudden appearance as special counsel of the aforesaid Marcus Helfand after the completion of the trial and solely for the purpose of obtaining special consideration and favor, the said Judge Winslow imposed an unusually light sentence of 30 days in the city jail on one Walter Gutterson, convicted of having used the mails in a scheme to defraud; and the said mild sentence having ostensibly been justified in open court on a promise of restitution to the extent of $100,000 to the several persons, victims of the fraud, while the said Judge Winslow then and there denied the motion of the assistant district attorney to make such light sentence conditioned on the actual restitution of the money to the victims of the fraud; and

Whereas the said Judge Winslow improperly and for other improper considerations so conducted the trial of a certain criminal case as to prejudice the jury against the Government of the United States prosecuting said case, so interjected himself in the examination of witnesses as to intimidate the witnesses or to confuse the issues, so abused and harassed the assistant district attorney charged with the trial of the case as to discredit him entirely to the jury, all with the improper purpose and intent of obtaining a verdict of acquittal for the said defendants then on trial before him; and

Whereas one Meyer Kaplan has stated that he obtained a suspension of sentence and was placed on probation by said Judge Winslow through improper and unlawful methods, and that he was finally committed to Atlanta Penitentiary by the said Judge Winslow because he was unable or failed to complete an arrangement made by and with the said Judge Winslow; and

Whereas the said Judge Winslow has knowledge of the said statement, charge, and accusation made by the said Meyer Kaplan since his release from Atlanta, but has taken no action to make the said Meyer Kaplan answerable in contempt proceedings or otherwise: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the House be, and is hereby, instructed to proceed immediately with an investigation of the conduct of Judge Francis A. Winslow in relation to his conduct in office, to the charges herein alleged, and of such other facts concerning the said Judge Francis A. Winslow as may be presented to said committee which may prove his unfitness for office.

The committee is authorized to call upon the Department of Justice for its assistance and cooperation in the conduct of this inquiry.

The committee is instructed to inquire fully into the whole nature and extent of the allegations made covering Judge Francis A. Winslow.

The committee is instructed, after its investigation, to report the result of its findings to the House, together with recommendation of exoneration, condemnation, or impeachment.

For the purpose of completing this investigation, the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized to appoint a subcommittee of such size as it may determine, which shall have, while so employed, all the power in respect to this investigation and process as is possessed by the whole committee, and such subcommittee is authorized to conduct its hearings while the House is in session.

The committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and shall have the right to report at any time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Why does not the gentleman formally impeach the judge if the gentleman believes the things stated in his resolution are true?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The answer is very simple. Because the gentleman, as my colleague knows, has not himself the power to issue subpœnas or to hear witnesses. In order to obtain all of the facts necessary to formulate proper articles of impeachment it is necessary for the Committee on the Judiciary to make a preliminary investigation.

Mr. MICHENER. My purpose in asking the question is this: That the regular procedure, as the gentleman well knows, in the House is for a Member of this body to arise upon the floor and impeach a judge against whom charges are made if the Member has sufficient faith in the charges to warrant him in doing so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is in error as to that. The gentleman was a member of the Judiciary Committee which considered a resolution exactly like mine in the case of Judge English. I am following the precedent established in that case. The gentleman is also familiar with the fact that when I did follow the formal method of impeachment in the Cooper case, the gentleman himself suggested that it might have been better had I followed the procedure in the English case.

Mr. MICHENER. I beg to differ with the gentleman. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the English case was a departure from all precedents; that it was debated in the committee, as the gentleman knows, for a long time, and debated in the House as to whether or not the House should establish the precedent of setting up investigating committees to investigate Federal judges throughout the country whenever there was anything suspicious against them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Thomas Jefferson said—and the condition here is exactly as it was at that time—that the machinery for removing a judge is so cumbersome that such serious charges must be established as to make that machinery practically useless. Now, the gentleman knows that when you have an entire bar demoralized, when you have this feeling current that there are miscarriages of justice; that a judge is acting improperly; and when you have an almost prima facie case established, yet a Member of Congress is absolutely helpless. He has not the power of issuing subpœnas. Why, not only myself but my colleague from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] has been working on this case for several weeks. Statements were made to our colleague [Mr. SIROVICH], in his presence and in the presence of an assistant district attorney, which are the basis of one of the allegations and charges in my resolution, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], understanding that in a matter of this kind there should be no political lines, has frankly stated that he is willing to cooperate with me or any other Member of the House in bringing all of these facts before the committee. It is a duty imposed upon us which we can not escape. I admit it is unpleasant and it is distasteful; but we can not sit here, coming from the district in which these conditions are charged to exist, without taking the action I am taking at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. My suggestion to the gentleman would be that if he has sufficient faith in the charges which he has enumerated that he formally impeach this judge; then automatically the impeaching procedure would be started, and an investigation would necessarily follow.

The committee doing the investigating would have all of the authority, whereas if the procedure which the gentleman is now suggesting is followed, the matter goes to the committee, the committee makes a preliminary investigation—which the gentleman undoubtedly has already made—to determine whether or not, as a matter of fact, there is reasonable cause to believe something is wrong. Then the committee must report back to the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has had too much experience to talk that way.

Mr. MICHENER. I have been through it several times.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that if it had not been for the investigation made in the English case, made possible by means of a like resolution, it never would have been possible to get all of the facts to formulate proper articles of impeachment. No one could do more than I have done or more than the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] has done up to date in getting these facts into sufficient shape to present them to the committee, and then the committee can make a preliminary investigation, come back to the House, and get the authority necessary to send out subpœnas and bring the witnesses in. The gentleman knows that no member of the bar is safe in testifying unless he does so under a subpœna. The gentleman from Michigan must know it is impossible to go into the court and get all of the records necessary to establish the allegations contained in my charges.

Mr. MICHENER. The committee is not going to have anything before it that the gentleman does not have. The only difference is that in the one case the gentleman, knowing the facts and representing the district and people primarily affected, assumes the responsibility of setting that machinery in motion on the floor of the House, while in the other way he does not. I do not believe that the House should establish further precedent that might result in demands to investigate every complaint against Federal judges without the responsibility of a Member back of the investigation.

Now, I say to the gentleman that if the things which he has suggested are true, is the gentleman afraid of the responsibility of setting the machinery for proper investigation in motion?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is not afraid of any responsibility, and the gentleman from Michigan knows the gentleman from New York well enough to know he is not afraid, but the gentleman is lawyer enough to know he must proceed in a careful and orderly manner. I know that the witnesses we require in order to draft proper articles of impeachment in this case can only be brought here by the power of subpœna in the committee; and, on the other hand, I want to be absolutely fair. I want to give this judge the same opportunity we would give any other individual. This will give him an opportunity to come in and submit any evidence he may desire, and will not submit him to the terrible tragedy of an impeachment if it is not necessary.

Mr. MICHENER. Just a word there.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will cite the gentleman a recent case that supports his position, and that is where a resolution authorized the committee to go into West Virginia and investigate a West Virginia judge; and in that case they found out that impeachment was not necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the resolution which he is introducing goes to the committee of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] and the gentleman's Judiciary Committee is to pass on whether or not it shall be brought before the House, and his committee can pass upon its sufficiency, so it occurs to me that the gentleman from New York is wholly within his rights.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And following the custom established and preferred by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. But why does not the gentleman from New York provide further in his resolution that this subcommittee can make the investigation during the interim between the two sessions?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have provided here that they can sit when the House is in session.

Mr. BLANTON. But why does not the gentleman provide that they can sit during the interim? This House adjourns in about a fortnight and why does not the gentleman provide that the subcommittee may sit during the interim?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was done in the English case.

Mr. MICHENER. That requires a joint resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the kind of resolution the gentleman should introduce.

Mr. MICHENER. That is possibly true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It has to be brought back to the House anyway, and the committee——

Mr. BLANTON. And the committee can then change it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. That is one of the details, and I want to leave the details to the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further for an observation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not opposing the investigation. I think if what the gentleman has said is true, there should be an investigation; but I am adhering to what I think the gentleman knows—because the gentleman has been on at least one of these committees with me—is the best procedure in the long run. I am insisting on a procedure which will in the long run be shorter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. MICHENER. Because the committee to be appointed now is not an impeachment committee, it is merely a preliminary investigating committee in order to determine whether or not articles of impeachment should be presented or whether or not this man should be impeached. If there is to be an investigation let that investigation be full and complete, based upon specific charges vouched for by a Member of this body.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I may say to the gentleman that the tendency of the times and the preference of this House is to follow this procedure, unless, of course, you have the commission of a felony that can establish the proof immediately or the improper conduct is of such a nature that you have tangible and ready proof of it; but otherwise we can not permit the impression to remain in the southern district of New York that these conditions exist. We must either establish them or else certify that these conditions do not exist. I pray and hope the latter may be the case. [Applause.]

I now introduce my resolution.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, in my entire career of public life of almost 25 years it has been my mission always to help everyone. I have been appointed by three different governors and mayors of New York on social, philanthropic, and humane legislation. So I have no axes to grind and have no desire to harm or to injure any person. I am no reformer, nor am I a crusader.

Almost five or six weeks ago the New York World brought to my attention certain conditions that exist in the Federal courts of the southern district of New York. I began to investigate these conditions personally, and then a case was presented to me through the New York World and investigated by the New York American and Journal and other papers in our great metropolitan city.

When these facts were presented to me I went over to see United States district attorney, Mr. Tuttle, and presented some of these facts to him for investigation. I have the greatest admiration for Mr. Tuttle and his chief assistant, Mr. Mintzer, in their desire to go to the bottom of this case; but high and above everything else I realize that justice must be done even to the accused judge, so I went to the chief judge of the Federal court, Judge John Knox, about five days ago, and I told him of a case that was presented to me by several New York newspapers and looked exceptionally suspicious to me in every conceivable way, and he sent for Judge Thatcher, of the Federal court, and after being together for three hours, it was their opinion that this case should be presented to Judge Winslow himself, and I concurred, because I have the greatest respect for every judge, and I think, in fairness to this accused judge, he should have the right to know the nature of the charges that are made against him. Judge Knox called me up on the phone this last Sunday and said that he spoke to Judge Winslow and Judge Winslow denied every charge alleged against him.

And so in fairness to Judge Winslow I think the resolution introduced by my colleague from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] calling for an investigation is fair, because if the committee determines that the judge was innocent, then he has every right to have the people of the city of New York pay tribute to his honesty and acknowledge the injustice done to his name and reputation; but, if on the other hand, the committee thinks there is something wrong, it is their duty to go on with an investigation.

And so let me tell you the nature of the case I presented to Judge Knox to tell to Judge Winslow. This case was worked out by the New York World and other papers. I am going to present it to you as a drama, being a dramatist myself. I will present the story in five acts.

Act 1 reveals Meyer Kaplan, graduate of New York University and Columbia Law School. After two years' work for an outside agency he engages in business for himself between the years 1914 and 1921. He is very prosperous, and in the year 1921 does a business of almost $4,000,000. Due to readjustment following the war, he finds it absolutely necessary to liquidate his business. He owed to various banks in New York City $1,500,000. He pays off all his obligations to the banks and his creditors, and then finds himself in bankruptcy, charged with concealing assets. The case is tried before Judge Knox and the jury acquits Meyer Kaplan.

In the course of this litigation Kaplan accuses the law partner of Assistant United States District Attorney Abraham Solomon of having the case dismissed if he would pay $1,500. This charge, called to the attention of former United States District Attorney Hayward, caused deep prejudice and bitterness between Solomon and Kaplan. As Kaplan leaves the court, Solomon vows that he will "get Kaplan some time later." This is the end of the first act.

The second act: After two years, Meyer Kaplan is now engaged in the real-estate business in Brooklyn, buying and selling property. He is very prosperous. He has a brother, Abe Kaplan, who for 10 years has been the owner of a delicatessen store in the Bronx. Because the neighborhood has changed, he determined to go into the plumbing business in Brooklyn in partnership with a man by the name of Smythe. Abe Kaplan requested his brother Meyer Kaplan to lend him $10,000, which he put into the business of Smythe & Kaplan. After four months Smythe and Kaplan can not get along together. Kaplan charged Smythe with intoxication and neglect of business and offered either to be bought out or to buy Smythe out. Smythe allows Abe Kaplan to take $10,000 worth of accounts receivable, and thereupon Abe Kaplan leaves the business and returns $10,000 to his brother, Meyer Kaplan, who had loaned the money to him originally to enter the business. Five months later, Smythe, on account of neglect of business, is put into bankruptcy by his creditors. The total liabilities are $15,000.

The case comes up before Judge Garvin, in the Federal court of Brooklyn. Meyer Kaplan makes an agreement with the judge that, although he is not morally or legally guilty of any violation of the law in having had his brother repay to him $10,000 he had advanced as a loan, he will pay back from his personal resources $15,000 worth of liabilities to every creditor in the concern. I understand the judge agreed to this settlement. All the business that was transacted by this concern took place in Brooklyn. The following day one of the attorneys for the creditors talked to Abraham Solomon, formerly assistant United States district attorney, who immediately has Meyer Kaplan, Abe Kaplan, and Smythe adjudged in bankruptcy and has them arrested for conspiracy to conceal assets. The case is tried before Judge Ross; and because Meyer Kaplan, on the advice of his attorney, did not take the witness stand on account of the former bankruptcy case in 1921, the jury found him guilty, and he was sentenced by Judge Ross, with his brother, to 18 months in Atlanta Penitentiary and a fine of $2,500 each. This is the end of the second act.

The third act: The case is appealed to the circuit court of appeals, and by a vote of 2 to 1 the decision was affirmed. On a writ of certiorari, the United States Supreme Court upheld the decision of the lower court.

A plea was made to President Coolidge for Executive clemency. Some of the most distinguished men recommended clemency, including the new district attorney, Buckner, and his assistant, William Millard, who reviewed the testimony in the previous case. But Executive clemency was refused. And so we have the ending of the third act.

The fourth act: Thereupon Meyer Kaplan and Abe Kaplan submitted a motion to Judge Francis A. Winslow to be placed on probation under authority granted by a recent act of Congress which applied to their case. This motion was argued before Judge Winslow on April 26, 1926, and decision was reserved.

A few days later Marcus Helfand called one of the former attorneys of Meyer Kaplan, in the person of Mr. Halpern, on the phone and requested an interview. During this interview Helfand declared to Halpern, and later to Kaplan, that if Kaplan wanted a decision on the motion in his favor it would cost him $10,000. Helfand contended that he was very influential with the judge, was constantly being appointed receiver and special master in bankruptcy cases, and that he would guarantee results. All in all, Kaplan and Halpern saw Helfand at least 20 times. Days passed by and weeks passed by, but no decision came. Finally Helfand requested Halpern and Kaplan and a man by the name of Frank Drucker, who was Helfand's manager, to be present at Thirty-third Street and Park Avenue and they would see him with Judge Winslow go to dinner in the Vanderbilt Hotel. At 6 o'clock that night the three were present, and lo and behold, Judge Winslow and Helfand emerged from the same automobile arm in arm and entered the Hotel Vanderbilt, where they remained until at least 8 o'clock, and then departed.

The following day Kaplan and his attorney visited Helfand, and Kaplan was advised that unless immediate consideration was given to the case he would not be paroled and would be sent to prison. And as another indication of his influence with Judge Winslow he said:

> To-night I am going to see a show opening at the Winter Garden with Judge Winslow. You will see me there sitting with him in the first row. If you don't bring your money along, I am through with the case. You can find me during the intermission between the first and second acts.

Kaplan bargained with Helfand and said he could only raise $5,000. And then Helfand advised him to bring the money along with him, and he could assure himself he and the judge were together. In company with his attorney, Kaplan went over to the Winter Garden that night, but did not see Helfand and the judge during the intermission because the place was too crowded. About 11 o'clock the show was finished and it was raining cats and dogs, so the people were crowded into the lobby. Then Kaplan finally beheld Helfand and Judge Winslow walking out together. Helfand observed Kaplan and his attorney and, leaving the judge, came over to them and said, "Have you got the money?" Thereupon Kaplan replied, "What about the judge in the case?" and Helfand remarked that everything would be all right. Kaplan gave to Helfand $5,000 in cash, and was told by Helfand to see him next day in his office, and then went back to the judge and entered an automobile and went away, and Kaplan and his lawyer departed.

The following day Kaplan visited Helfand with his attorney and was told that everything would be well, provided he would give the other $5,000 after he would be paroled, which Kaplan agreed to. Thereupon Kaplan recommended the name of former United States District Attorney J. Arthur Adler as probation officer. A week or so later Judge Winslow granted the motion placing Kaplan and his brother on parole for the full term of their sentence under the probation of Mr. Adler. This is the end of act 4.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman will break the continuity of my statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to know whether you have a bar association in New York?

Mr. SIROVICH. I do not know what kind of a bar association the gentleman means.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean one that would attend to that kind of a lawyer.

Mr. SIROVICH. That will come in time. Now, we begin the fifth act. Meyer Kaplan moved over to Freeport and engaged in a partnership with a man by the name of Tongonaky and formed the Sun Ray Lumber Co., of which Tongonaky was president and Kaplan treasurer. This company engaged in the business of building houses on the lots of other people and took in return first and second mortgages for their work. After they were in business for some time a dispute arose between Kaplan and Tongonaky, and Tongonaky instituted a proceeding before Judge Farber for a receivership in equity, which the court, after listening to the testimony, denied. A few days later Tongonaky secured a receiver in equity in the Federal court. Kaplan accused his partner of having diverted funds of mortgages for his personal use, and because of this discord and dissension Kaplan instituted proceedings for disbarment of Tongonaky, which I understand has been approved by the bar committee of Nassau County. Thereupon Tongonaky appeared before Judge Winslow and accused Kaplan of being crooked and corrupt in his business.

Kaplan had been on parole for almost 17 months and a week, had regularly reported to his probation officer, had had no complaint filed against him, and so Judge Winslow discharged Probation Officer Adler and put in his place a man by the name of Daley, and called upon Assistant United States District Attorney Mintzer to issue a warrant for the arrest of Kaplan.

During the 17 months that he was on parole Kaplan contends that Helfand was constantly calling upon him to give the balance of $5,000 in which he was in default. Kaplan refused to give this money, and thereupon Helfand said: "The judge will fix you."

When Kaplan was arrested and brought before Judge Winslow neither he nor his attorney was given an opportunity to speak, but Judge Winslow is reported in newspapers to have remarked:

> You are the most brazen criminal I have ever had before me. You haven't the slightest idea of what it means to be on probation.

And thereupon Kaplan was sentenced to serve the full 18 months in Atlanta.

The next day Kaplan was in the Tombs, and while there Kaplan contends that Helfand visited him and said:

> Had you paid the balance of $5,000 this would never have happened. I am awful sorry that the judge went to this extreme.

It might interest the membership of this House to know that the name of this show that opened in the Winter Garden on May 18 was the Great Temptation, and that the report from the Weather Bureau shows that on that night it began to drizzle about 6 o'clock or thereafter and then stopped and that it rained in torrents after 10.30 p. m.

It might also be interesting to find out if the name of Helfand is on the blotter of the Tombs the day after Kaplan was sentenced to serve his 18 months in the Atlanta prison.

An incident that is interesting so far as this case is concerned is that Judge Winslow and Helfand, after the parole was granted to Kaplan, took a trip to Europe in July on the Hamburg-American Line, and their cabins were very near each other.

I am indebted to the New York American and Journal for supplying me with the above facts.

Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, I have no malice, no ill will, no prejudice toward any human being in the world, and none toward Judge Winslow. These charges have been bandied about in New York, and in justice and fairness to Judge Winslow he is entitled to his day in court. For the love and respect that I entertain for judges, wherever they may be found in our country, I sincerely believe the charges in the resolution submitted by Congressman LAGUARDIA should be thoroughly investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to have any gentleman ask me any question he desires.

Mr. SANDLIN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SIROVICH. I want to finish with this.

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. SIROVICH. After listening to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], than whom no fairer man is found in this House, I think a committee should investigate this case and find out whether there is any merit in it, and if there is no merit in this case I would be among the first to get up on the floor of the House and ask that Judge Winslow be exonerated in fairness to him and all the other Federal judges on the bench. We owe it to them and to this House, I think, that this investigation should go on.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank you, gentlemen, for your kindness in listening to me.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The judge the gentleman mentioned a moment ago was Judge Ross.

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes; Judge Ross. I am glad to stand corrected. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back one minute of his time.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I, too, feel in regard to the statements made on the floor here concerning a man with whom I am well acquainted, that this resolution should be adopted, that some means must be provided or method afforded to enable Judge Winslow to clear his fair name of the serious reflections upon his judicial conduct which have been made here to-day. I have known him for 30 years. He is a respected citizen and resident of my county of Westchester, which is included in the southern district of New York. For several terms he was district attorney of that county. He was one of the leaders of its bar, highly respected, intrusted with every kind of legal and other responsibility and trust. It would come as a great shock to the citizens of my county to have charges of this kind made against a man in whom they have had such great confidence for so many years. We all know that, dealing with some of the elements of society that all judges deal with, they sometimes are subjected to unfortunate situations.

Personally, I am entirely unfamiliar with these charges and have no knowledge of the facts, but, knowing Judge Winslow as I have for so many years, it would take more than the statements made here on the floor to persuade me that these charges are well founded or that the circumstances referred to are not subject to satisfactory explanation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman know whether these charges are being investigated at the present time by the Department of Justice?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. MICHENER. And if the charges have been made and are being investigated by the Department of Justice in an orderly manner, without publicity, would the gentleman feel that this man should be investigated by the Congress unless some one in Congress was able to assume responsibility of following up the due procedure of impeachment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will say in reply to the question of my friend that this is all, in a sense, new to me. Of course, I have seen suggestions of this kind in the papers, but I am not familiar with the charges or the facts. But if what the gentleman from Michigan suggests is being done, if there is a method or means by which these charges can be investigated by the Department of Justice, it would probably answer the purpose in order that finally the matter might come before the Congress in an orderly manner for final disposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I agree with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] has said, that this judge could have taken dinner with this man Kaplan; he could have gone to this opening show at the Winter Garden with him; he could have gone abroad on the same boat; and he could have been seen in Habana with him. And yet at the same time he could have been innocent of any wrongdoing. It all depends on whether or not Kaplan was telling the truth on him.

I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] is correct in saying that this judge would want a hearing and would want the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the matter, and I hope that the resolution will pass in such a way that a subcommittee can go to New York, which is a 5-hour ride from Washington, to investigate the matter in the interim between the two sessions. It ought to be investigated in behalf of the judge himself and in behalf of the people.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I have not the time.

If it has not been done, it is evident that they have a very lax bar association in the city of New York. In my State a lawyer could not get away with that kind of business.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. No. The gentleman can get time later.

I want to complete what I tried to do yesterday. I offered yesterday, in connection with a matter that is being investigated, to put before the people of Washington and the Congress the police record of Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, who says in response to the serious charges, "I offer my 33 years on the police force as an excuse for what is charged against me." Here is his official police record.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not. I wrote to the commissioners and received the following:

(Office of the President of the Board, Proctor L. Dougherty)
COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 11, 1929.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Replying to your request of the 9th instant I am attaching hereto a copy of the police record of Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, of the police force.

Very truly yours,

PROCTOR L. DOUGHERTY,
Commissioner District of Columbia.

From this record I read the following charges that have been made against him since he has been a member of the force, and I will say in passing that this police record will compare favorably in the number of complaints against him with the police record of some of the greatest crooks that infest Washington.

[From official police record of Capt. Guy E. Burlingame. Files of Metropolitan police department, Washington, D. C.]

Date appointed, March 13, 1896.

Civil condition: Wife and one child.

Complaints and disciplinary action: 12–23–96. Tried gross neglect of duty. Fined $10.

That was within a few months after his appointment.

2–1–99. W. M. Johnson complains of his conduct. No action.

4–23–99. C. G. Rollinger complains of persecution. No action.

8–14–99. Clipping from paper makes statement re assault on C. Howard. No action taken.

5–17–01. Reported in an anonymous letter re meeting a young lady. His conduct found all right.

6–29–02. C. E. Tribby complains of his conduct. No action.

2–23–03. B. Smith complains of his conduct. No action taken.

5–7–03. Tried neglect of duty. Fined $10.

10–10–04. Daisy A. Wylie complains of his conduct. No action.

10–19–04. Martha Johnson complains re the arrest of her sons. No action taken.

2–27–05. Annie Williams complains of his conduct. No action.

5–9–05. Nellie V. Owens complains of his conduct. No action.

6–17–06. H. English re to his complaint against Burlingame.

9–9–07. Tried violation Par. 9, Sec. 37 & #49. Not guilty.

12–4–07. Dr. T. J. McConnell complains of his intimacy with his wife. Burlingame says he may have been indiscreet.

12–30–14. Swingle & Swingle complain to alleged false arrest. Investigated and filed.

8–14–20. Report in matter of playing cards with F. Bauer and citizens.

4–21–21. Reprimanded and cautioned for taking possession of an automobile.

7–25–23. J. E. Carr complains of his conduct.

3–17–25. Ida Williams complains of his conduct. Investigated. Filed.

7–1–25. Promoted to captain.

7–12–25. Ralph E. Harris complains of statements made by officer in trial of case derogatory to character of Mrs. Harris. Investigated by Capt. Reilly who reports complaint not well founded. Papers ordered filed without prejudice to officer.

12–7–25. Reprimanded and warned by major and superintendent for directing squad to enter State of Maryland, etc.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not yield. After the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin allowed the Speaker on yesterday to embalm him in the Speaker's chair during important business I can not yield to him any further.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say the gentleman is afraid to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. No; and I do not yield on that. I have proved to the gentleman from Wisconsin so many times that I am not afraid of him that he knows it better than I can describe it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield at all. Now, here is what the chief of police, the major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police, testifies under oath before the Gibson committee concerning Captain Burlingame. Questioned by Mr. GIBSON, here is what he said about him just recently:

He is the best roughneck policeman we have. He smashes them. A little while ago, when they would not give him any warrants for illegal possession, or he could not get a sale, he went into the house, smashed everything in the house, and threw everybody into the street.

That is what the major says about him, when the district attorney's office would not give him a warrant. What does he care about a warrant? He goes in and smashes things and kicks everybody into the street. That is what the police major says about him.

I want you gentlemen who are interested in law enforcement in your Nation's Capital to write down to Mr. Dougherty, the commissioner of police, and have him send you the police record of all of the high police officials down there. Get the police record of Inspector Pratt, the assistant superintendent; get the police record of Inspector Brown; get the police record of Inspector Shelby, and read them over like I read this one, and you will see why your law enforcement has failed in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry but I can not yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan because I know he is helpful.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is his opinion, after reading that record, that it is necessary for a police officer to qualify as a lady's man before he attains high office in the Metropolitan police department?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], when all these women have come into the police department, whose names I have read here, and have complained about this man, why is it that marked across the complaints are the words "no action"?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is what prompted my question.

Mr. BLANTON. No action!

Mr. O'CONNELL. Yes; there was action—they promoted him to captain.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, the commissioners and the major-superintendent seem to be the only people in Washington or in the District Building who do not know of the Burlingame work escapades, and who do not know of the Burlingame escapades for the past several years out at the corner of G and Sixth Streets NE.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Tell us about them.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish I had the time to tell you about them.

Let me read you about some specific matters that have come to the chairman of your committee, Colonel GIBSON. The writer says that if his name were known his life would not be worth 15 cents in Chinese money. [Laughter.]

He says:

Hon. Representative GIBSON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: All the near-beer bars in Washington, D. C., which have been in business since the city of Washington, D. C., went dry have police protection, the money is paid weekly and daily to the captain of each police station and they give Major Hesse his part of the loot. When the vice squad start out to make raids upon the fellow——

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. The gentleman is not supposed to read from a paper in the House except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The gentleman ought to learn the rules, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. John, I yield to you. What is it you want, John. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it not a fact that when the gentleman was acting as attorney for Mr. Staples before the trial board and one of the members of the board was objected to and Captain Burlingame's name was submitted as a member of the trial board the gentleman from Texas approved of the selection of Captain Burlingame?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, Captain Burlingame was hand picked.

Mr. SCHAFER. That does not answer the question. It will be borne out by the records of the trial board.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for that. Just be seated. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. And when——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further.

Mr. SCHAFER. Just one more question.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield any further—be seated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas refuses to yield further.

Mr. BLANTON. Captain Burlingame was not a member of the trial board and neither was the other captain that was sent there. They were hand picked and sent down there by headquarters to convict this young fellow, just like the new board that will try Captain Burlingame will be hand picked.

Mr. SCHAFER rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield any further now.

They will be hand picked, and I will tell you why. Did you know that one of the leading lawyers, who represented Fenning in that famous case here, who, all through that hearing before the Judiciary Committee, sat there and defended him, one of the leading lawyers here, was a partner of Mr. Taliaferro, who was made commissioner, and when the Gibson committee forced Fenning to resign and get out, and when the Gibson committee showed the contracts that Commissioner Rudolph had with the District government enriching himself and his own firm by reason of such contracts, we forced him to get out——

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield on the Fenning matter?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield any further.

Why, these two commissioners, Dougherty and Taliaferro, were appointed in their places. That is the reason you have an 8-cent car fare here in the District of Columbia, with 65,000 little school children paying an 8-cent car fare every day, with the holders of the street-railway stocks making fortunes, with the stock having gone up 300 and 400 and even 500 per cent within the last few years; it is because of this association, and this is the reason you can not get anything down there in the District Building.

Let me read this letter further. Now, John, do not interrupt me further.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman answer one further question?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I do not want to yield any more now; that is enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will be fair. I will not insist on my point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to let you put anything in my remarks I do not want in there. [Laughter.] I quote further from this communication addressed to Chairman GIBSON:

When the vice squad start out to make raids upon the fellow who has not bought police protection, all of the individuals who have police-bought protection are phoned a message about the vice squad being on their way to their neighborhood. When they get this message, they hide all the whisky and stop selling until the excitement is over.

Go up to 1421 P Street NW., Dutton's Buffet, he sells whisky seven days per week from 7 a. m. to midnight; then also watch 1429 P Street NW., stand in front of these two places and watch and you will see they own P Street; also watch 1427 P Street NW., and see the gambling going on there all day. These two bars do a land-office business. See this for yourself.

See Hughey Lawley, full-fledged bar on G Street between Sixth and Seventh Streets NW. He pays the first precinct $15 every morning the minute he opens the door for business and $15 more when he closes.

I could mention 50 more places if necessary.

When you investigate the P Street places watch how many police go into these two places and get their drinks and their lunch at Dutton's.

Are we going to sit still, we Representatives of the people, and allow this to go in the Nation's Capital? I know how Harry [Mr. WURZBACH of Texas] feels about this kind of business, because Harry is the one Republican Representative in Congress from Texas, who has denounced the practice of his political managers down there in selling post offices in my State. [Applause.]

Why, Harry knows about this investigation that is going on now by a Senate committee with regard to Texas post offices being sold, and Harry knows that the investigation shows that over $200,000 in notes was given the Republican organization in Texas, 80 per cent of which was given by Federal officeholders; is not that so, Harry?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is violating the rules of the House by mentioning in debate an individual Member of the House by name.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, he does not care.

Mr. SCHAFER. But I do, and I insist that the gentleman from Texas comply with the rules of the House when talking about anonymous communications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, now that the embalmed Member from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] has made his point of order, and since the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH], who is affectionately known by his friends as "Harry," does not object, I will proceed with my speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have about concluded. What are you Members of Congress going to do about this police situation in the District? Are you not going to have it cleaned up? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER] 30 minutes.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, during the last three years I have addressed the House on three separate occasions regarding the public lands and resources. The first of these addresses was on February 17, 1926, and entitled "The Public Lands"; the second was on January 11, 1927, entitled "The Public Land States and the Federal Government"; the third was on February 21, 1928, entitled "States or Provinces?" In these presentations I reviewed our acquisitions of territory, the international treaties under which they were acquired, the ordinances of 1787 in connection with the cessions by the separate Colonies and States, the compacts with the States, the constitutional provisions regarding territory, and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

There were therein quoted at length extracts from debates in the Senate in the Twentieth Congress, first session, January 28, 1828, and for a considerable period running to 1836, expressing the views of many Senators and a formal report of the Senate Public Lands Committee in 1832.

These debates strongly presented the theory that under the Constitution, and the treaties, and the ordinances each new State upon admission gained the full sovereignty, jurisdiction, and ownership of all the soil and resources within its boundaries. The Senate Public Lands Committee report of 1832 presented the reasons for and advocated the ceding back to the States then admitted and to new States when admitted, all the territory and natural resources within their borders. Neither of these propositions were adopted. The East, with its great preponderance of voting power, refused them. At that time Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Kentucky were urging the rights of the then West.

I reviewed the theory of trusteeship, which was adopted, under which the Government was to hold the legal title as trustee and as quickly as feasible dispose of the lands to the people, thus eventually substituting private ownership and full jurisdiction, including taxation, of and by the States. This was accomplished in due course as to all States east of the Rocky Mountains, and they now have come into such conditions and powers.

As to the States from the mountains to the Pacific, attention was called to the radical change in the general policy and the departure from original and long-followed methods and purposes beginning, in the main, in 1898 whereby reservations were made of Indian lands, national parks, national monuments, power sites and reservoirs, mineral leasing areas, naval oil reserves, and forest lands, all to the extent of approximately 220,000,000 acres; leaving at this time 193,847,240 acres of unreserved and unappropriated public domain.

It was pointed out that 97 per cent of this public land was in the 11 Western States; that the total of the reserved and unreserved public lands, aggregating approximately 414,000,000 acres out of a total of 760,049,600 acres in those States, comprises on an average 55 per cent of the area of each of said States, and that this major part of the soil and resources of said State were nontaxable.

If we take the average ratio of valuations of real property and improvements of exempted to taxed property in the 11 public-land States, we find according to the official report of 1922, the figure to be 38.79 as compared to the average ratio in the nonpublic-land States of 11.45. Yet the public-land States while having the burden and obligation of jurisdiction, maintenance of law and order, spread of education and road building, do not derive one cent by way of taxation from this large, Federal-controlled portion of their total valuation.

Notwithstanding the payment back to the States from which the proceeds of lands and resources are derived of a portion of such proceeds, amounting to 25 per cent of receipts from the forest reserves, with an added 10 per cent devoted to roads, and 37½ per cent of the royalties coming to the Government under the mineral leasing act, there is universal dissatisfaction in the Western States because of the inadequacy of this return from their resources and because of the American spirit of independence which demands, regardless of material return, full recognition of these States with complete independence and sovereignty on an equality with the original States, as provided in the international treaties, the ordinances of 1787 reenacted by Congress after the adoption of the Constitution, 1789, and the cessions from the States of their territory to the United States.

Under these documents, and indeed under the Constitution, the great purpose was the building up of new, independent, sovereign States, which were to be admitted on equal terms with the original 13 States. The theory was that lands should pass to private ownership as rapidly as possible, so that the new States might come into full sovereignty without delay in order that all States might be equal.

That this was the original, right, and American method of handling the new territory acquired from time to time is evidenced among many sources by the following quotation from the Encyclopædia Britannica, eleventh edition, volume 27, page 684, paragraphs 78, 79, 80, 81, and 82:

TERRITORIAL CESSIONS

78. Congress and its committees had already begun to declare that it was impossible to carry on a government efficiently under the articles. Its expostulations were to be continued for several years before they were heard. In the meantime it did not neglect the great subject which concerned the essence of nationality—the western territory. Virginia had made a first offer to cede her claims, but it was not accepted. A committee of Congress now made a report (1782) maintaining the validity of the rights which New York had transferred to Congress; and in the next year Virginia made an acceptable offer. Her deed was accepted (March 1, 1784); the other claimant States followed, and Congress, which was not authorized by the articles to hold or govern territory, became the sovereign of a tract of some 430,000 square miles, covering all the country between the Atlantic tier of States and the Mississippi River, from the British possessions nearly to the Gulf of Mexico.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT

79. In this territory Congress had now on its hands the same question of colonial government in which the British Parliament had so signally failed. The manner in which Congress dealt with it has made the United States the country that it is. The leading feature of its plan was the erection, as rapidly as possible, of States, similar in powers to the original States. The power of Congress over the Territories was to be theoretically absolute, but it was to be exerted in encouraging the development of thorough self-government, and in granting it as fast as the settlers should become capable of exercising it. Copied in succeeding acts for the organization of Territories, and still controlling the spirit of such acts, the ordinance of 1787 (July 13, 1787) is the foundation of almost everything which makes the modern American system peculiar.

80. The preliminary plan of Congress was reported by a committee of which Thomas Jefferson (q. v.) was chairman, and was adopted by Congress on the 23d of April, 1784. It provided for the erection of 17 States, north and south of the Ohio, with some odd names, such as Sylvania, Assenisipia, Metropotamia, Polypotamia, and Pelisipia. These States were forever to be a part of the United States, and to have republican governments. The provision, "After the year 1800 there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States, other than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted," represented Jefferson's feeling on this subject, but was lost for want of seven States in its favor.

81. The final plan of 1787 was reported by a committee of which Nathan Dane, of Massachusetts, was chairman. The prohibition of slavery was made perpetual, and a fugitive slave clause was added. The ordinance covered only the territory north of the Ohio, and provided for not less than three nor more than five States. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin have been the resultant States. At first Congress was to appoint the governor, secretary, judges, and militia generals, and the governor and judges were, until the organization of a legislature, to make laws subjected to the veto of Congress. When the population reached 5,000 free male adult inhabitants the Territory was to have an assembly of its own, to consist of the governor, a legislative council of five, selected by Congress from 10 nominations by the lower house, and a lower house of representatives of one delegate for every 500 free male inhabitants. (When the total number should reach 25, the legislature itself was to have the power of regulating the number and proportion. Property qualifications were prescribed for electors, representatives, and members of the council.) This assembly was to choose a delegate to sit, but not to vote in Congress, and was to make laws not repugnant to "the principles and articles" established and declared in the ordinance. These were as follows: The new States or Territories were to maintain freedom of worship, the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, trial by jury, proportionate representation, bail, moderate fines and punishments, and the preservation of liberty, property, and private contracts; they were to encourage education and keep faith with the Indians; they were to remain forever a part of the United States; and they were not to interfere with the disposal of the soil by the United States, or to tax the lands of the United States, or to tax any citizen of the United States for the use of the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi or St. Lawrence Rivers. These articles were to be unalterable unless by mutual consent of a State and the United States. The transformation of the Territory, with its limited government, into a State, with all the powers of an original State, was promised by Congress, as soon as the population should reach 60,000 free inhabitants, or, under certain conditions, before that time.

82. The Constitution, which was adopted almost immediately afterwards, provided merely (Art. IV, par. 3) that "Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," and that "new States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union." Opinions have varied as to the force of the ordinance of 1787. The southern school of writers have been inclined to consider it ultra vires and void; and they adduce the fact that the new Congress under the Constitution thought it necessary to reenact the ordinance (August 7, 1789). The opposite school have inclined to hold the ordinance as still in force. Even as to the territorial provision of the Constitution, opinions have varied.

Again I emphasize the thought which should be constantly borne in mind, that after proceeds of the public lands had been devoted to the payment and extinction of the debts of the original States, incurred for the Revolutionary War, which fulfilled the obligation of the "common benefit of all the people," that thereafter the sole and only purpose of the trusteeship of the Government of the public lands was to as expeditiously as possible transfer them to private ownership so that the only other stated object in the treaties and cessions, to wit, raising up of new, independent, and sovereign States, might be effected.

The benefit of the public-land trusteeship and disposition manifestly was originally intended to be to the people inhabitating the area of each new State and thus assist in the upbuilding of such State. If these benefits from the proceeds of the public lands in each new State were to be disseminated and spread out to the people of all of the States, it is obvious that the one great, explicit, and expressed object of the Government trusteeship, to wit, the upbuilding of new States out of these areas, would be retarded instead of accelerated and great values diverted which they could never regain.

The great fundamental policy which was to work out the complete sovereignty of each State over all of the lands within its borders was rapid transfer into private or State ownership. This great policy and purpose has been violated and set aside by the immense reservations and withdrawals in each of the public-land States on the literal theory of the benefit of all the people of the United States to an extent which now amounts to more than 220,000,000 acres, 30 per cent of the total area of the present public-land States.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Is there any homestead land now subject to entry in the Western States?

Mr. WINTER. Yes; I will reach that in just a moment.

To that extent the complete sovereignty of these States, which was eventually, if not upon admission, to be brought about by transfer from the Federal Government to private or State ownership, has been utterly defeated.

Unless there be a change of policy and law by the Congress of the United States with reference to these great reservations, the States are and always will be denied complete control, which they have a right to expect as equal members of the Union. These reservations will remain a government within a government in each one of these States. This was never contemplated by the Constitution or the founders of this Nation, and is in fact prohibited by the Constitution.

I will insert as a part of my remarks at the conclusion statistics from the 1928 report of the Secretary of the Interior and tabulations derived from statistics showing the disposition of all of the area of continental United States, exclusive of Alaska.

As to the reserved and withdrawn areas, excluding and excepting only the national parks, it is manifest that justice, equity, equality, and dignity for these States require that ultimately all should be ceded to the States wherein they lie. The theory that the Western States can not intelligently and wisely administer these areas, for example, the forest reserves is based on the delinquencies and wastefulness of the States to the eastward, which had their resources and their opportunity, and in some cases, as States, misused and abused their rights. This constitutes no reason why the same right which they enjoyed should be denied to the Western States. The self-respect and sovereign right of these public-domain States must demand and continue to urge that they shall not be discriminated against and excepted from the general rule, which has been applied to all States from the Atlantic coast to the Rocky Mountains, of eventual, complete sovereignty over all of their areas.

In my judgment, it was never within the purview of the decision of the United States Supreme Court, when it held that the power "to dispose of" included the power "to reserve," that such reservations and withholding from the States should ever be extended to these enormous and unreasonable proportions. The area already permanently reserved goes far beyond anything that was contemplated 30 years ago by either the courts or the Congress. It is an unreasonable, excessive, and therefore unauthorized and unjust exercise of the power of the Congress to reserve.

Only 45 per cent of the area of the 11 Western States has come into State and private ownership. About 10 per cent went to the State. Perhaps 40 per cent, on an average, is now in private ownership. Practically all of the benefit of the $590,847,240 received by the Government from the public lands has gone to the other States. By these immense reservations the Western States are barred to that extent from proceeds from sales in the future. It is even sought to stop the sale, homesteading, and settling of the present vacant and unreserved lands by placing them under a regulation and lease system and repealing the 640-acre act, which is the only act under which, in view of their character, they could be taken up.

We did not share in the past because of our youth, being the last group of States admitted. Shortly after admission the policy of great reservations began, and the reservation of mineral rights from homesteads. We are not to share therefore in the future, as there will be no lands sold. Thus we have been and are practically outside of the limits of even the doctrine which has been imposed that the public lands were "for the benefit of all the people." While we are included in "all the people," the policy was stopped just at the time we would have participated in a small part of the benefits of the total. One billion acres were disposed of, and the benefits went almost entirely to the States east of the Rocky Mountains. Then disposition ceased and reservations were made of 30 per cent of the remaining area; and now it is sought to cease disposition of all the remainder, 25 per cent of the area of each State, figuring the average. We were too early and we are too late. Something should be done in the face of this unjust and anomalous policy and condition.

If these permanent reservations are to be forever retained by the United States, then why is it not just that those States from whose areas they are taken for all the people should have recompense for their value, or an annual return for their use, based on the value of that use, in view of the loss to those States of development and taxation? Let it be understood that in the national parks no development can ever take place. Let it be equally understood that agricultural and mining development, while legally and technically possible, has practically ceased and will not be resumed on the 149,596,379 acres of forest reserves in these Western States, and that the small proportion coming back to the States of the proceeds of grazing fees and annual timber sales is wholly inadequate to make up for the loss; likewise the small return from royalties from Federal water-power sites; and that the royalties devoted to the reclamation fund are not repayments to the West but loans which must be repaid.

The total area in acres of the forest reserves in the mainland, Territories, and possessions is 184,463,819. The total area in acres on the mainland, exclusive of Alaska, is 163,066,062. The total area in acres in the nonpublic-land States, purchased in the main from private ownership, is 13,403,633. The total area in acres in the 11 public-land States reserved from the public domain is 149,596,379. The net area of the national forests in the United States proper, exclusive of private property within their exterior lines, is 135,533,824 acres.

Senator STEIWER, of Oregon, has introduced a resolution (S. J. Res. 203) for the appointment of a joint committee to study the public domain and the national forests and recommend a legislative policy in relation thereto. I trust the resolution will pass. It will be a definite beginning of the change of policy we are seeking.

In this connection, and to support my statement of deep-seated unrest and dissatisfaction of the West with respect to the present policy as to the public lands and resources, I quote one of a great number of editorials and articles. This is from the Portland Oregonian of the issue of January 26, 1929:

THE WEST'S RIGHT TO EQUALITY

Adjustment of the relations of the Federal and State Governments with regard to public land, as proposed by Senator STEIWER, is necessary to the full development of the 11 Western States and to their full equality with the other States. Half to four-fifths of the area of the Western States is withheld from their sovereignty. That fact places them in a position inferior to that of other States. Reservation from sale of vast areas held as national forests, power sites, national monuments, or under lease to production of coal, oil, and other nonmetallic minerals threatens to perpetuate this situation. Payment to the States of part of the revenue from this reserved land emphasizes the inferior position of the Western States, for the sums thus paid have the appearance of doles graciously given by a superior to an inferior. The Western States resent the suggestion of inferiority and claim as a right the disposal of the land within their borders.

The ground of that claim has been stated by Representative WINTER, of Wyoming. He said in a speech at Lander, Wyo., some time ago:

"In every international treaty under which the various areas were acquired it was expressly stipulated, as it was in the ordinances of 1887, that separate, independent States should eventually be organized and that they should be admitted into the Union on equal terms with the original thirteen States. It is manifest that there can not be complete and equal sovereignty, as was provided in international treaties and the Constitution, unless ultimately if not upon admission the power of the Federal Government over the land that comprises the State ceases and that of the State in jurisdiction, authority, and taxation completely attaches."

This principle was set aside in 1834, when Congress rejected a proposal to cede the public land to the States wherein it lay and resolved to continue Federal control after the Territories became States. But it termed the Government a trustee and stated that "the lands were to be administered for the benefit of the States in which the lands were located and sold into private ownership as rapidly as possible." This purpose was perverted to mean "for the benefit of the people of all the States." The public land of the East, South, and Middle West passed into private ownership and has become subject to the sovereign power of the States, but the Government still holds a large proportion of the area of the 11 Western States.

So long as the policy of gradual transfer of public land to private hands was followed, the Western States were willing to await the day when the public domain would cease to be, when their entire area would become subject to their taxation and other laws and when the Government would wind up its trusteeship. But conservation effected a complete change of policy. It decrees that public land shall be administered as the property of the Nation for the welfare of the Nation, not as a trust for the individual States. By setting aside national forests and by requiring that power sites and mineral land be leased, not sold, the Federal Government assumes the position of a landlord who has resolved to hold his great estate in perpetuity, making the State only half masters of their territory and consoling them with a fraction of the revenue. Insult is added to injury when the Eastern States, which have squandered their own magnificent patrimony, justify this policy by the charge that the West has looted the public domain.

The West is not content to remain indefinitely but half ruler in its own house. It will not submit to administration of half its area by the prodigal East, which has wasted its own landed wealth and now proposes to practice frugality on that of the West. The West's retort to the charge of looting is that whatever misdeeds of that character have been done were the result of land laws passed by the East and South in ignorance of western conditions. Having shown their incompetence in this manner, the East and South propose to subject the West to it indefinitely by perpetuating Federal control through a swarm of bureaucrats.

No departure from conservation of natural resources is contemplated. The West is fully convinced of the wisdom of that policy. The spectacle of the slaughtered forests of the East and Middle West is an eloquent argument. But the West contends that it has the right to full sovereignty over all its lands and that it is competent, in exercise of that right, to follow out the conservation policy with due regard for the welfare of each State and of the United States. The senatorial inquiry proposed by Senator STEIWER should be held to determine the rights and equities involved and to devise a plan by which the public land may be transferred to the States and by which conservation may be practiced on land of every class. The Western States know they must live on their natural wealth and are not likely to destroy it.

I now desire to discuss and confine this presentation to the status and disposition of the unreserved and unappropriated public domain, amounting to 193,847,240 acres, 97 per cent of which is in the 11 Western States, and which constitutes approximately 25 per cent of their total area. They are now open, as they have been since 1862, to homesteading. A serious effort is being made under the recommendation of the Department of the Interior, representing only the national and Federal viewpoint, to repeal the homestead law under which they are being taken and settled, to wit, the 640-acre grazing homestead act.

In lieu of this it is sought to substitute a perpetual Government landlordism in the form of a regulation and fee permit or lease system. If successful, this would clearly defeat and make impossible forever the execution of the government's solemn trust to the people of these later States and abandon a century-long policy of this Government. It would destroy the possibility of settlement, development, and taxation and complete State sovereignty of 25 per cent more of their area in addition to the 30 per cent now permanently reserved. This would perpetuate for all time the Federal Government in control of the greater part of the area and value of property and resources in each of these States.

It is incredible that such a proposition should receive serious consideration. It is contrary to the genius of our American system of Government. It is a violation of the purposes of our forefathers and of the Constitution.

The unreserved public lands should be disposed of by the Federal Government to private ownership as to the surface by again enlarging the homestead area from 640 acres to 1,280 acres, or by direct sales of surface rights in limited amounts not exceeding 2,560; or cession to the States wherein the lands are located of the surface and mineral rights. I favor this last plan and have introduced H. R. 477 to this end. I now wish to present herewith the manner and effect of ownership and administration of these public-land areas by the States. I have already disposed of the suggestion that, because some of the older States are alleged to have wasted their mineral, forest, and swamp lands, therefore, the Western States should not have the same right as enjoyed by all of the States east of the Rocky Mountain Range.

In the first place I call attention to the fact that Texas has retained and administered all of her public lands and resources and that she eventually worked out a good sale or lease system. I recall that Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, and Oklahoma have made good use of the mineral rights and resources that they were permitted to retain or their citizens to acquire patent for without mineral reservations. It is an unwarranted reflection upon the Western States that they can not or will not conserve and wisely use their own resources. I have every faith in the intelligence, integrity, and wisdom of the people of the Western States. Federal control has not been infallible.

It has been said that this course would stop the Federal reclamation policy, and therefore and thereby harm the development of the arid West, because the fund would be deprived of the receipts from royalties coming to the Federal Government through the mineral leasing act, 52½ per cent of which goes under the law, to the reclamation fund. In answer, let me say, first, that the 15,825,539 acres withdrawn for ultimate reclamation development by virtue of that withdrawal is not a part of the unreserved and unappropriated public domain and would not, therefore, be ceded to the States if cession were made. In the second place, while it is true that future payments into the fund from the sale of public lands and royalties under the leasing act would cease and the States would receive such receipts direct under their own laws and provisions, there is a reclamation revolving fund now approaching $200,000,000 which will remain.

The great projects, such as the Boulder Dam and the Columbia River Basin, are not to be financed and never can be from the reclamation fund. This fund will continue to revolve and be replenished by repayments by the settlers upon the projects under their contracts. Last year they repaid over $5,000,000. These payments will be increased under their contracts. With the settlement of vacant areas and the completion and settlement of present authorized projects, these repayments will approximate eight to ten million dollars annually. With these annual repayments, the Federal reclamation policy can proceed.

It has been said that if the Federal Government parts with the remaining public lands and they come thus into the possession and control of the States, this would stop the homestead policy, and thus interfere with the settlement of these States. Passing over the inconsistency of this argument by those who would expressly repeal the 640-acre grazing homestead act, on the contrary, I assert that these separate States will each be able to create and maintain a homestead policy of their own which will be better suited to their separate needs and bring greater benefits to all concerned than the present Federal homestead act. Some States desire to have the area of the grazing homestead remain at 640 acres; some desire to increase it to 1,280; some have adopted resolutions, by their legislatures, in view of the character of the remaining lands, the best having been taken, asking Congress to increase the area to four sections, or 2,560 acres. The representatives of some States desire to administer the public domain under a regulation and fee permit or lease plan. The present Federal homestead law is rigid and applies alike to every State, regardless of its special conditions. If owned by the States, each State could adopt the policy best suited to its lands and needs. The greater number of the Western States will, in my judgment, inaugurate and maintain, if these lands are ceded to the States, a better homestead system than now prevails or can prevail under a uniform or any Federal law.

The States, once the ownership of the public lands is returned to them, can take the following courses:

First, they can preserve all the present free range, which is now being threatened with extinction by powerful interests, Federal agencies, and the Department of the Interior.

Second, they can create, maintain, and administer a better homestead law than the one now in force.

Third, they can sell such areas in such limited amounts for such reasonable prices as will best subserve the State and the livestock industry.

Fourth, they can lease for nominal or low rates until sales are made.

Fifth, they can retain title to all minerals in all these lands and lease for mineral purposes under a royalty system. The rate of royalty would be governed by the best interests of the State and the mining industry, keeping in mind the encouragement of prospecting and development. Inasmuch as the State now receives back from the Federal Government only 37½ per cent of the royalties collected, the State could fix a lower royalty and encourage the mining industry and make possible mineral development, which otherwise could not take place, by reducing the royalty materially below the amount now required by the Federal Government and still receive for the State treasury a far greater amount than under the present system, because they would receive 100 per cent of such royalty, reduced only by the cost of administration.

The added proceeds from these sources of public land sales and leases of grazing and mineral rights would provide a fund whereby, if it was desired, the State could build reclamation projects and thus hasten the general development.

It has been suggested that cession to the States of the public lands would change the policy from the benefit of all the people to the people of these particular States wherein the lands are located. I have heretofore shown that the people of the States of each area were and are the rightful beneficiaries of the lands and resources within their borders; that it is not just that the States east of the Rocky Mountains should come into possession of all of their lands or resources, either to the State or to private ownership; and that the same privileges or rights should be withheld as is now done and further proposed as to the States from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific.

But, further, I hold that the common benefit of all of the people of all the States, from the public lands and resources, would in fact be best subserved, as was originally intended, by the building up of well-populated, strong, prosperous States where these areas are; that these States would help to feed the Nation; that they would create markets for billions of dollars annually for the products of the States to the eastward and add to the wealth, the security, and the greatness of the common country, as a whole; and that this course would in the long run best redound to the "benefit of all the people" of all the States.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WINTER. I yield.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Are they taking up many of the homesteads now?

Mr. WINTER. Yes; they took up 3,300,000 acres last year.

Mr. ALLGOOD. How many acres more are open to entry?

Mr. WINTER. If the movement to which I have just referred is unsuccessful, and the homestead law is left as it is, there is still an area of 190,000,000 acres subject to homestead.

Mr. ALLGOOD. At the rate that it is being taken up it would last for 40 or 50 years?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

It can not be denied that the policy of conservation, regulation, and reservations adopted by the Congress during the last 30 years constituted a radical change of policy, subjecting the Western States to reservations, deprivations, regulations, restrictions, limitations, fees, charges, and royalties, to which the States from the Atlantic to the Rockies were never subjected.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WINTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ALLGOOD. When the Western States were admitted to the Union, were these reservations in the enabling act?

Mr. WINTER. No; they were not. In certain States the enabling act provided that the United States hold the title and the States would not interfere with the primary disposal of the land. Otherwise, there were no limitations of any kind as to the administration of the land in the Constitution or enabling act.

Mr. ALLGOOD. These reservations were made by act of Congress?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Since the States were admitted to the Union?

Mr. WINTER. Yes. The great bulk of them have been made since the States were created and admitted to the Union.

These immense reservations are attempted to be justified under the policy of conservation. There is no real conservation necessary or accomplished except that of the forests. The Western States know more of the facts and conditions and have a better-founded appreciation of true conservation than those who live at a distance from the things to be conserved. The Western States are in direct contact with the forest areas and know better than anyone else the value of the forests in the conservation of rainfall and snowfall to regulate and restrain the floods and retain the waters for irrigation and reclamation. As to coal, oil, gas, oil shale, sodium, phosphate, and potash, these things need development and use rather than to be locked up under the extreme theory of conservation. Every American farm from the Rockies to the Atlantic Ocean is in growing need of the three great elements of fertilizer, phosphate, potash, and nitrate. The imposition of royalties defer the day when these essentials can be profitably produced. Our coal, oil, and iron are inexhaustible. Coal and oil shale both furnish or will furnish untold quantities of gas and upward of 100,000,000,000 barrels of crude oil according to the report of the United States Geological Survey and of the Secretary of the Interior.

I therefore hold that conservation in its true sense will be upheld by the States if these lands and resources are ceded to them, and that there is no justification in the policy of conservation or on any other ground for longer withholding from these States the lands and resources within them. This is true of both the reserved and unreserved areas, but I again call attention to the fact that the present movement to cede the remaining public lands to the State where located refer not to the parks, the forest reserves, and the other reservations which I have enumerated but to the vacant, unreserved, and unappropriated public domain.

All of these lands, both reserved and unreserved domain, are of great potential value, running into billions of dollars. It will, of course, require many hundreds of millions of dollars of private capital and many decades to develop their mineral resources so as to make return to the Government or to the States through fees and royalties. The Government or the States can not and should not go into Government ownership and operation.

The power lies in Congress and in Congress only. There is no possibility of recourse to the courts. The theory strongly debated and presented in the Senate of the United States from 1826 to 1836, and never successfully answered, that under the international treaties, the ordinances of 1787, the cessions by the original States, and the Constitution, that every State upon admission came into full ownership, possession, dominion, and jurisdiction, for all purposes, can not be advanced in the courts for want of jurisdiction where the provisions of an international treaty are concerned. Therefore, the only way in which justice and equity can be done is for Congress to change its laws and policies and now finally terminate the trusteeship which it has now been administering for more than a century, and make these States, at least to the extent of the remainder of the public domain, in truth and in fact sovereign and equal to the other States of the Union.

I am well aware that the Supreme Court has held in a strict legal sense that these States have been admitted on an equal basis and are fully sovereign when they are granted, as they have been, full political equality and representation in the Congress and the Government; and that the phrase "admitted on equal terms with the original thirteen States" means political equality and does not apply to the soil and land; but from the standpoint of equity it is obvious that States which do not have ownership control and the power of taxation over more than one-half of their areas and the resources contained therein, are not on an equal footing with other States which have come into such full jurisdiction and dominion.

The fact that west of the Mississippi the territory was acquired by purchase, and therefore the title went direct to the United States instead of by cession from the States as it was of the area east of the Mississippi, should not and does not change the fundamental plan and genius of the American system of erecting new States with the same powers as the original States. There should not be two different bases and policies with respect to the relation of States to the Federal Government and their development. The Federal Government has received back its purchase price outlay of $62,200,000 and $520,000,000 in addition, the total receipts being $590,000,000.

The average price per acre paid by the United States for the 1,112,619,280 acres in the United States proper secured by purchase was 5 cents. The price per acre paid for the 378,165,760 acres constituting Alaska was 0.019 cent. The average price paid for all, including Alaska, was 0.042. For the approximately 1,100,000,000 acres which the United States has disposed of it has received an average of nearly 55 cents per acre.

A State can not develop as it should unless its soil and resources come eventually, if not upon admission, into private ownership or State ownership, and thus to private control and development. The international treaties under which these purchased areas were acquired contained the same express provisions regarding the building of new sovereign States upon an equality with the original States, as were provided in the ordinances of 1787 and the cessions from the States of the area east of the Mississippi. Again, the original States retained great areas of public land within their final boundaries which they sold and applied the proceeds to State development.

I realize that if these lands and the resources are ever ceded to the Western States, it must be done by the votes in the Congress of the United States, coming from the States east of the Rocky Mountains. The arid States of the mountainous West have less than 35 Representatives in this House out of a total of 435. We can not demand and force our claims upon you. We feel that if this object is ever attained it will be by virtue of knowledge, information, education, argument, and persuasion. I know of no stronger force or method than to appeal to your intelligence, your sense of fairness, justice, and equity. I am certain that when you have the time and the opportunity to give to this question your full and fair consideration you will come to the conclusion that we are right in our position. No group of States in this Union, however large and powerful, will, when once convinced of the justice of these claims, refuse them.

On the filing of the memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming to the Congress asking for the cession of the remaining public lands in that State, the following editorial appeared in the Washington Post:

WYOMING STARTS A MOVEMENT

On February 17 the Governor of Wyoming signed a resolution adopted by the legislature of that State which may bring about a decided change in the control of public lands.

In a series of preambles which are predicated upon an exhaustive search of decisions of the courts and administrative acts Wyoming sets forth reasons, which seem to be based upon a sound foundation, why the public lands, not only in that State but in all the other so-called public-land States, should be turned over to the States for disposition so that they may be developed and made to contribute a share of the cost of local government.

The Commonwealths which will doubtless join with the petitioner in this instance are Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, California, Oregon, and Washington. * * * * * * Wyoming appeals to the other States named in its memorial to join with her in a memorial to Congress to turn over all the unappropriated and unreserved lands for such disposition as the legislature may deem most advantageous for the general welfare. With this end in view Wyoming has invited the others to meet in convention in some convenient place when the best means to securing congressional compliance may be discussed.

If the proposed convention is assembled and the 11 States named get together, their 22 Senators and 33 Representatives in the next Congress are likely to accomplish the result aimed at. * * *

The Western States are not looking for a great gift. The cession of these lands and their minerals would not mean sudden available wealth. They want and would have, if lands and resources were ceded to them, the opportunity to work out by the capital and brain and skill and brawn of the investor, the capitalist, the employer, the farmer, and laborer, their industrial and agricultural development.

The claims and basic equities of the States have been recognized partially in numerous acts of Congress: In the reclamation act, the Federal water power act, in the forest reserve act, in the mineral leasing act. This is but a part. They are entitled to the whole.

We have been forced by virtue of this anomalous condition of vast areas owned and controlled by the Federal Government within our borders to come to Congress with many requests for aid. We have been humiliated by this necessity and often unjustly denied. Give us our lands and resources, as you have had yours, and we shall cease to importune Congress for financial and other aid to develop our States. The relation, as it were, of guardian and ward and the consequent doling out of appropriations for various purposes for which we must beg is not compatible with the dignity of the rights of sovereign States in this Union. We are not, and ought not to be, in a class of provinces or dependencies. We ought not to be compelled to remain in the attitude of suppliants asking for annual support or gratuities, allowances, doles, or gifts. We claim the status of sovereign States and the right to develop. Return us our lands and resources and we would disdain to seek from the hands of Congress one dollar of Federal aid for any purpose which does not apply equally to all the States. We will be gratified and delighted when that day comes, as it must come, when, standing on an equality with all the rest of the States of the Union, we shall take part in and ask only to be participants and beneficiaries of those things which come to all of the States of the Union by reason of the general and national policy of internal improvements.

Higher and greater and vastly more important than lands and resources, income, taxation, development, and material prosperity is the principle that under the Constitution we have the right to stand and must become and remain equal and sovereign in a nation of sovereign States. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced in the House and have had pending for some years what is now H. R. 6465, applying the quota restrictions of the immigration law to Mexico and American countries. The State Senate of the State of Arizona recently passed, as I am informed, by unanimous vote, a resolution memorializing the Congress to enact the law. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by having a copy of that resolution printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions:

NINTH LEGISLATURE, REGULAR SESSION,
STATE OF ARIZONA.

Senate Memorial 1 (introduced by Mr. Ross) memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact the provisions of H. R. 6465, Seventieth Congress, first session, known as the Box bill, thereby restricting immigration from the Republic of Mexico into the United States of America

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Ninth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session, respectfully represent that there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill (H. R. 6465, 70th Cong., 1st sess.) known as the Box bill, which restricts immigration from the Republic of Mexico into the United States of America; that in the past years there has been legislation enacted by the United States limiting the number of persons which might come to the country, and fixing quota of any one nation in any one year. That law has solved many of the problems with which this country is confronted, and has resulted in very material gain to the working people of this country; has helped to maintain the standard of living of the laboring classes, and demonstrates that it was the proper solution of the situation which confronts us.

Your memorialist further represent that there is at the present time in the United States of America approximately 3,000,000 people who are citizens and descendants of citizens of the Republic of Mexico. This large number of people are engaging in work of a character that competes with American men and women, and of a class of work in which we have an ample supply of laborers at home. This creates an oversupply and works a hardship on our own citizens.

It is a further fact that in this State of Arizona an attempt was made some years ago to require that 80 per cent of the workingmen in any industry should be citizens of the United States. This law was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States; whereas, on the other hand, in the Republic of Mexico a similar requirement of that law, in respect to the number of native-born citizens who must be engaged in any industry, is upheld and enforced, thus creating inequality in the law and conditions under which the citizens of the respective countries labor.

Experience has taught that whenever a large number of citizens of a foreign nation come into the United States of America to serve a temporary need of a seasonal demand for labor, such laborers are recruited from the poorer class, and make impossible the maintaining of the American standard of living. They are willing to and do work for an amount of money inadequate to properly support, rear, and educate their children. They are sources of infectious, communicable diseases, and usually after such labor has been performed they often become public charges and are a menace to the health of the country, a strain on the hospitals, charities, and other institutions of our country. It has been the experience in the State of Arizona that, instead of it ever being an economic benefit in industry, it has resulted in a governmental responsibility far outweighing any benefit that might be derived temporarily by filling such labor needs.

It is our conclusion that the policy of not restricting immigration to the country is wrong, and no good sound argument can be offered to justify an exception: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the Ninth State Legislature of the State of Arizona favors the maintenance of the basic provisions of the immigration act of 1924, and urges upon the Congress of the United States the enactment into law of H. R. 6465, first session of the Seventieth Congress, commonly known as the "Box bill," making the quota provisions thereof applicable to Mexico, Cuba, Canada, and the countries of continental America and adjacent islands; and your memorialist will ever pray; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, properly engrossed, be transmitted to the Hon. JOHN C. Box, and to each of the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Adopted January 31, 1929.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, to my way of thinking, to-day should be one of deep significance to us all. One hundred and twenty years ago this the 12th of February there was born out in the great State of Kentucky, at that time mostly wilderness and considered the Far West, a child who was, I believe, marked by the Eternal God to serve the Nation in his own great hour.

Many great men and women were born in the year 1809, but this character, who was born in poverty, reared amidst hardships, schooled in the forest and the prairies under the everlasting elements, and who experienced one heartbreak after another, transcends them all. Gladstone was great, Emerson as a nineteenth century philosopher ranks first, but this great character stands alone. He has no peer. He is preeminent in a class by himself.

Abraham Lincoln passed across the horizon of the nineteenth century and left not only a great heritage to mankind, but so changed the social status of the whole world that he has been termed by a critical and able foreign writer as one among a half dozen of the greatest men of all time.

The efforts of the searchers and critics of the years have acted on his life like the rubbing of a precious stone, for they have made it shine with more luster. In fact, he was a real diamond and not an imitation. Needless to say, he never compromised with the wrong and had a firm belief in the final triumph of the right under God. He has embodied in his life as nearly as anyone the great injunctions of the Master to love one's enemies and to love one's neighbor as himself.

Probably the most severely criticized public man of any time or any country, yet he endured and exemplified nothing but kindness and love. In conformity with the great commandment, he was reviléd and reviled not.

Notwithstanding all that has been said and written about him, we stand too close to him, even now, to see the real man as he was and properly evaluate his greatness. When we stand near the foot of a great mountain, we can not see it as it is, but can only see a rough gorge or two on the sides, with a few trickling streams, interspersed with foliage here and there. Only when we recede does the eye take in the mountain from base to peak and see it in all of its grandeur of outline as it goes up from the brown fields through its evergreen timber region to the perpetual snow of its summit. So it is even to-day with our Lincoln; we stand near him and only see him partly, but as time passes and the ages roll on his life will stand out in all its beauty and splendor and new and more sublime phases of his character will open up as a heritage to humanity and as a succor to those seeking liberty and freedom.

No President except him ever said or could have said with the same force, "With charity for all and with malice toward none," because it came as a direct inspiration from God.

His phrase "Bind up the wounds" included his whole life philosophy, for he had spent it in trying to bind up wounds of others.

A great patriot, a great Executive, a great statesman, a great literary figure, but he was greatest of all in love and charity, for his great heart went out in deep compassion to the humble and the distressed of all the world.

Although—as Whitman so beautifully said in his poem "O Captain! My Captain!"—his pulse is still to-day and his body lies fallen cold and dead, his spirit lives, and we feel that we can hear it speak to us to-day, paraphrasing those immortal words which have been so beautifully and appropriately read to us by the gentleman from Ohio, that we, reaching from every hearthstone and every fireside altar in the land to the sacred foundation of the Nation's Capital, reconsecrate ourselves to those ideals and rededicate ourselves to the task that is before us; that we carry on under God the liberty and freedom of that country for which he gave his all. [Applause.]

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

"Now he belongs to the ages," muttered Secretary Stanton, when the great spirit of Abraham Lincoln had left its earthly abode. Probably the speaker himself, even in that moment of prophetic insight, failed to realize the great truth in these simple words.

To-day a statue of Abraham Lincoln occupies a prominent place before the House of Parliament in England. One of the greatest and most successful plays of recent times was written by an Englishman—John Drinkwater—and devoted exclusively to certain phases of Abraham Lincoln's career. Spanish thinkers, French historians, German scholars, and intellectual leaders everywhere unite to-day in venerating Lincoln as one of the finest characters and one of the ablest men who ever trod the face of this earth.

Several thousand books have been written devoted to his career, and yet within the past two years two new, great Lincoln biographies have appeared and met with generous popular response. The American schoolboy has Lincoln set before him as an example from the time when he first begins to read. The Chinese or Hindu scholar studies the emancipator's career and finds it a great source of inspiration.

How may we account for the vastness of this fame—the growth of this Lincoln legend, if one would so term it? His rise from an humble log cabin on the prairie to the White House may account for it in part. But there have been many other similar careers in our own country and in other lands. His humanitarian and tolerant attitude toward the suffering and errors of common people accounts for it still more. But that is not the whole story, either. The character of Lincoln is loved by ordinary folks everywhere, but the ability and power of this same man is respected by statesmen.

He put his bitter political opponents in his Cabinet because of his high regard for their ability. He heeded their advice in all matters and then decided everything for himself. He hated war, but he led his Nation into war for the preservation of a principle. He fought the seceding States vigorously, but never exhibited anything but kindness and sympathy toward southern people in their hour of trial and trouble.

Lincoln never compromised with what he regarded as a great principle for the sake of temporary advantage. He was always sympathetic toward the weak and afflicted but powerful to the strong and arrogant. He was both a kindly man and a heroic figure—a rare combination in the entire history of the world.

The Lincoln legend may well be preserved, and even embellished for succeeding generations, for nowhere may there be found a better ideal of statesmanship.

STANZA VI OF ODE RECITED AT THE HARVARD COMMEMORATION, JULY 21, 1865

By James Russell Lowell

Such was he, our Martyr-Chief,
Whom late the Nation he had led,
With ashes on her head,
Wept with the passion of an angry grief:
Forgive me, if from present things I turn
To speak what in my heart will beat and burn,
And hang my wreath on his world-honored urn.
Nature, they say, doth dote,
And can not make a man
Save on some worn-out plan,
Repeating us by rote:
For him her Old World moulds aside she threw,
And, choosing sweet clay from the breast
Of the unexhausted West,
With stuff untainted shaped a hero new,
Wise, steadfast in the strength of God, and true.
How beautiful to see
Once more a shepherd of mankind indeed,
Who loved his charge, but never loved to lead;
One whose meek flock the people joyed to be,
Not lured by any cheat of birth,
But by his clear-grained human worth,
And brave old wisdom of sincerity!
They knew that outward grace is dust;
They could not choose but trust
In that sure-footed mind's unfaltering skill,
And supple-tempered will
That bent like perfect steel to spring again and thrust.
His was no lonely mountain peak of mind,
Thrusting to thin air o'er our cloudy bars,
A sea mark now, now lost in vapors blind.
Broad prairie rather, genial, level lined,
Fruitful and friendly for all human kind,
Yet also nigh to heaven and loved of loftiest stars.
Nothing of Europe here,
Or, then, of Europe fronting mornward still,
Ere any names of Serf and Peer
Could Nature's equal scheme deface
And thwart her genial will;
Here was a type of the true elder race,
And one of Plutarch's men talked with us face to face.
I praise him not; it were too late;
And some innative weakness there must be
In him who condescends to victory
Such as the Present gives, and can not wait,
Safe in himself as in a fate.
So always firmly he:
He knew to bide his time,
And can his fame abide,
Still patient in his simple faith sublime,
Till the wise years decide.
Great captains, with their guns and drums,
Disturb our judgment for the hour,
But at last silence comes;
These all are gone, and, standing like a tower,
Our children shall behold his fame,
The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing man,
Sagacious, patient, dreading praise, not blame,
New birth of our new soil, the first American.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, as a result of the recent bad break in the stock market resolutions have been offered in the House and Senate proposing an investigation of loans made by several Federal reserve banks and amendments have been introduced to the Federal reserve act, as amended. The purpose of these resolutions, and the proposed amendments to the Federal reserve act, is apparently to hold investigations and hearings which will be instrumental in bringing out information that may be used by the Congress to write such legislation that will prevent the Federal Reserve Board from using its powers to artificially raise or lower the markets in securities. Investigations and hearings while sometimes irritating to the public as a result of a misunderstanding of their nature and purpose are productive in the way of bringing out information that may serve as a basis for legislation which tends to promote the general welfare. The investigations made by the Banking Committee when Congressman Arsene Pujo, of Louisiana, was its chairman, undoubtedly paved the way for the introduction and passage subsequently of the Federal reserve act. This act has not been a cure-all but through its provisions a stabilization was effected without which we could not have financed our World War operations which necessitated the expenditure of amounts so huge as to stagger the imagination even when emotionalism had lifted us so high as to almost remove our feet from the ground.

The act has not been a panacea for all our ills, though in time it may bring about results not yet achieved but which were in the minds of many of its sponsors and creators, many of whom hoped that the system would make for that supply of money and credit in each of the financial regions brought into existence so as to make for the development of business and the profitable movement of our commodities, agricultural and commercial. This purpose has been temporarily frustrated in a measure by reason of the fact that investors and speculators in securities have been willing to pay a higher rate for the use of money, particularly in New York, that as a consequence has attracted millions and millions of dollars which a great many students of finance hold would otherwise have remained in different sections of the Union making for banking funds that could be and would be invested in real trade, the movement of agricultural products and manufactured articles and commodities.

As a result of a number of causes and factors New York has an enormous banking capital. Rivers of gold flow from every part of the United States into this vast reservoir. Transportation rates making for stupendous sums all flow with clocklike regularity to New York. Insurance rates, life and fire, to a large extent flow in the same direction. These funds have to be invested in order to make them productive, for their trustees can not ignore the Biblical suggestion of increase and bury their talents. Every bank in the United States carries a part of its reserve in New York banks. These reserves, plus their own resources and deposits, combined with the surplus funds of the great insurance companies and corporations that have their domicile in the magnificent city which is Rome and Babylon put together, make it stand out as the colossus of the financial world. It is not quite two years ago since the newspapers of the country carried a news item that more than 50,000 persons had journeyed to New York solely for the purpose of speculating in the securities listed in the stock exchange of the Goliath city of the world.

There are some things, Mr. Chairman, however, which should be approached cautiously from the legislative standpoint. No one sympathizes more with the unfortunate fool who plunges into a speculation in hopes of winning that fortune that will enable him to provide his family with the luxuries which an insatiable modern civilization apparently demands. I sympathize with the man or woman blinded by enthusiasm and the hopeful view of a prospect that will fade out of the picture and leave him and her unheeded, alone with death sweeping down on their failures, and even their faith overthrown. In every generation apparently since the dawn of civilization many, too many poor fools, men and women, have stood at the dying of the day with their work all around them bent, broken, and ruined as a result of a blind enthusiasm and a heedless attitude toward the obvious principles and factors of human existence. Tens of thousands of men and women bought land at fabulous prices in Florida, when a single moment of thought would have convinced them that there was no crop, however bountiful that might be raised upon it, which would pay a fractional part of the taxes that are as inevitable as death when that land was in the rural part of the State; and no urban development, however great, could make for a return that would during the course of a lifetime even pay for a part of the payment of the thoroughfare upon which abutted their property when in towns and cities, actual or in prospect. It is saddening to reflect that there are only too many who come into the world in every generation who are doomed to see slip from their hands the prize which they have for a moment apparently grasped and whose youth and old age have never produced a prosperous flower in its branches. And yet the world could not afford, notwithstanding the tragedies of speculation and investment, to stem that wonderful tide which has made for a development of natural resources and the opulent growth of a stupendous civilization paling into insignificance the glory that was of Greece, the grandeur that was of Rome. The value of Milton's immortal Paradise Lost is in its wonderful setting forth of the wisdom that lies in moderation in all things. As a result of education, which is constantly making progress among all people, soon or late strength of character will come that will protect in a measure people from playing the part of fools that rush in where angels fear to tread.

A civilization that has produced so many school houses, libraries, and newspapers which are the crowning glory of our educational system will ultimately but inevitably make for a saner process on the part of those who if left uncontrolled by such wisdom would continue to feed themselves to the maw of Moloch.

Success in amassing a competence is achieved most generally by hard work. When won in any other way its triumphs are not lasting and its laurels are likely to fade and wither overnight. These are my own observations with respect to the financial system which makes for victims as well as for beneficiaries. Apparently there is good and evil in all things. Some philosophers have asserted there is good in evil and evil in good. While we sympathize with the vanquished the thought must come to those who have given any attention to the subject that governmental interference might bring about a condition immeasurably worse than that which results from an orgy of speculation. It is better to suffer the ills and sorrows of an outrage fortune than to fly to those which we know not of and that we may not be able to endure.

We live in a world governed by law, ceaseless in its operation and irresistible in its effects. Inanimate as well as animate nature is controlled by it with a certainty that is mathematical. Money moves for investment looking to an increase in accordance with a mandate more powerful and fixed than that of the Book which orders man to go forth and increase and multiply. It obeys that law as yieldingly as does matter the laws of gravitation, and just as surely as the earth revolves on its axis and plunges through its orbit, and just as remorselessly, unconsciously as it were, but always pursuing and observing the law of its existence

With all the sentimentalities probably against it, that movement carried more than $11,000,000,000 abroad since the war, and exclusive of our Government war and after the war loans many publicists thought our own country offered investment opportunities superior to the public utilities, municipal, and State requirements and necessities of European countries; but that thought thundered from the fortresses of American liberty and power, the editorial rooms of the great dailies and magazines, did not disturb the movement for a moment and did not switch it from its path by the fraction of an inch. And again, by way of a return to the regular narration of the subject, the raising or lowering of the rate of discount does not have any substantial effect on stemming the tide of speculation. Superficially it may appear appealing, but as a matter of fact the interest involved is of no consequence to the speculator or gambler if you will, though it may be of some concern to the professional scalpers, whose operations are inconsequential when contrasted with the enormous movement that takes place apparently periodically and sporadically but really always as a result of an accumulation by those born to take a chance. The ineradicable tendencies of man must be wisely regulated through education and not prohibited by legislation which will not only fail of its purpose but may lead to results far more pernicious than the ill sought to be cured.

In a multitude of counsellors there is much wisdom. This is substantially, if not accurately, the statement that may be found in that Book which expresses the crystallization of the wisdom of the ages. I am in receipt of a letter from a man who has played out a great part in the grand drama of life. His stage has been the great Mississippi Valley, and in that valley he has done noble things, not dreamed them all the day long. As a torchbearer he lighted the way for those who had eyes to see that a proper flood-control plan and system would make for an opulence and a splendor in the Mississippi Valley far surpassing that of the Nile, the Tigris, and the Euphrates. He was an earnest, sincere advocate of flood control when it was difficult to secure the attention of the people to that great problem. He cares not for fame, but hopes and looks for results. He is a writer, journalist, and economist. He is known to the students of waterways from St. Paul to New Orleans and from the ramparts of the Rocky Mountains to the crest of the Alleghenies. I refer to Walter Parker, who has written me his views, which I think will prove of interest to the people of this country and particularly to those among whom he has labored so long and affectionately. With no other thought in his mind than of advancing their welfare, and knowing that the reward of one duty well performed is the power to do another, he has written me the following letter, conveying views with which I may not be entirely in accord with, but which I am sure are worthy of the consideration of his countrymen:

> In all probability Congress is hearing from home from stock traders who have lost a lot of money during the past two days as a direct result of the gratuitous attack on the market by the Federal Reserve Board.
> Here are some side lights on the situation which may prove of value to you:

There is actual delivery of the stocks traded in on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, and 100 per cent in cash of the purchase price is paid within 24 hours after the sale and purchase.

Such transactions constitute simply a transfer of actual bona fide owners, the new owner carrying the investment in full in place of the old owner who secures the price thereof in cash.

The volume of daily stock transactions now constitutes a smaller percentage of the total issues outstanding than was formerly the case when the daily turnover was much smaller.

The total amount of brokers' loans represents a smaller percentage of the national interest in stocks than formerly. To-day literally millions of individuals own the common stocks of the great enterprises of the country, whereas a few years ago such stocks were held by a relatively few thousand individuals.

In a broad sense there are two ways for the investor to get the benefit of the increment being produced as the country grows and develops—lands and common stocks.

Lands are not a liquid investment. They are more easily bought than sold.

Anyway, a large percentage of the total increment capable of being produced by the land in the United States has already been realized. Immigration restriction is a factor in slowing down the ability of land to develop additional increment. The increase in the population of the country will slow down somewhat.

In the larger aspect, business development not only has not encountered such a check, but on the contrary is discovering new economies and new opportunities for larger net profits. Consolidations, chain stores, partial payments, new markets at home and abroad—the great war brought new desires, new experiences, new demands to many backward people throughout the world.

The common stock of the great enterprises of the United States constitutes the ownership of such enterprises. To the common stock comes not only the net earnings but the increment. Such stock when properly margined supplies the very best known collateral for call loans. It is instantly salable at the full market value in cash, through the stock exchange.

In the very recent past many of America's business volume standards have changed.

During and after the war the United States oversold to the remainder of the world and in payment drew in most of the money and securities held abroad. Before the war English investors held about $5,000,000,000 worth of American investments. Most of these found their way back to the United States in exchange for needed war material and merchandise.

The United States has become a lender instead of a borrower of money abroad.

More and more the United States requires overseas markets for its surplus manufactures.

Every share of stock bought, whether it be held for 1 minute or 10 years before being sold to some one else, and whether it be paid for in cash in full by the buyer, or paid for in part and the remaining cash being obtained through a bank time loan or a broker's call loan, is a share carried by some one in some enterprise which actually or prospectively is engaged in some form of labor employing, resource developing work.

South America, Africa, Russia have greater natural resources than has the United States. But they lack the means of financing great enterprises for the development of their natural resources. Consequently their populations do not enjoy genuine economic ease.

In the United States rapid means of communication, the willingness of underwriters to underwrite great enterprises because of the readiness first of temporary and finally of permanent investors to relieve the underwriters, so that they can reengage in further undertakings, the very liquid character of finance, and the present-day desire of the public at large to participate in such enterprises through common-stock ownership, plus natural resources, give the United States opportunities for development, expansion, and wealth building not known in any other country. Hence our great prosperity and economic ease.

Stock trading is merely a part of the whole.

Open trading will effect a proper balance for itself.

There is now a greater economic need and use for call loans than formerly. Quite naturally the higher call-loan interest rates are the more money from all the world will naturally flow to the call-loan market. Conversely the lower the call-money interest rate the less money will be attracted by the call-money market.

Normally, no money seeks profitable use in the call-money market except such moneys as can not be loaned on time—reserves which must at all times be subject to call.

In the South industrial enterprise is now looking up. We will need literally billions of dollars for new factories, smooth roads, new transportation, municipal improvements and the like. The larger economic development of the South depends on the ability to secure financing on the grand scale.

An open and untrammeled market for stocks and securities is essential. We can not hope to finance the new South and its requirements in the old way of peddling local stocks to local investors.

No man is under compulsion to buy investment stocks, but not infrequently owners are compelled to sell. Therefore an untrammeled market for stocks is in the public interest.

There is an immutable economic law which assures an ultimate balance in the stock market if that market be left free to conform to that law.

Very truly,

WALTER PARKER.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17053, the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. KVALE, at the request of Mr. SELVIG, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. KING, at the request of Mr. DENISON, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 51. Concurrent resolution to appoint a committee from the Senate and House to represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., October 15 to 20, 1929.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6496) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Oklahoma with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Cimarron River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested, disagreed to by the House, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6497) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, Pecos, and Canadian or Red Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested, disagreed to by the House; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6499) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and Arizona with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Gila and San Francisco Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested, disagreed to by the House; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7024) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and New Mexico with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Rio Grande, San Juan, and Las Animas Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested, disagreed to by the House; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7025) entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Oklahoma, and Kansas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Arkansas River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested," disagreed to by the House; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. DALE and Mr. MCKELLAR members of the joint select committee provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the United States Civil Service Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16422) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. KENDRICK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8736) entitled "An act to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate, numbered 15, to the bill (H. R. 15386) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16301) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2206. An act to amend section 260 of the Judicial Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3001. An act to revise the north, northeast, and east boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park in the States of Montana and Wyoming, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3100. An act to facilitate and simplify the work of the Department of Agriculture in certain cases; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 3233. An act for the relief of Harry E. Good, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4964. An act to authorize the erection of a suitable statue of Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals within the Canal Zone; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5543. An act to establish the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 196. Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to take steps in an effort to protect citizens of the United States in their equitable titles to land embraced in territory to be transferred from the State of Oklahoma to the State of Texas and from the State of Texas to the State of Oklahoma as per decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Oklahoma v. Texas (1926, 272 U. S. 21, p. 38), and to give the consent of Congress to said States to enter into a compact with each other and with the United States relating to such subject matter; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

SPEECH OF HON. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech by my distinguished colleague from North Carolina, Mr. ABERNETHY, delivered over the radio at Station WJSV, Washington, D. C., February 9.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by Hon. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY, of North Carolina, over radio station WJSV, Washington, D. C., on the subject of farm relief:

FARM RELIEF

On January 25, 1929, I spoke over this station to a radio audience on the question of farm-relief legislation. At that time I urged that it was necessary for western and southern Members of Congress to unite if we expected any substantial relief in the way of legislation for the benefit of the farmers.

The first session of the Seventieth Congress adjourned with no relief. The second session of this Congress will adjourn the 4th of March without any legislation being enacted for the benefit of the farmer.

It is not my purpose to do more than to give the situation as it is, so that the responsibility may be placed where it properly belongs for this delay in granting the relief for agriculture.

At the last session of Congress the farm leaders of the country very generally backed what was known as the McNary-Haugen bill. This bill, with its equalization fee and price-fixing provisions, sought to raise the prices of agricultural products so as to put them on a parity with the manufactured articles. By this legislation it was sought to place agriculture along with other businesses favored by law, such as manufacturers, railroads, and the like, which by legislative favor get at least reasonable returns on their investments. We were told, and I, as one Member of Congress, believed it, that if the McNary-Haugen bill was written into law the price level of agricultural products would be placed on a parity with manufactured articles which are favored by the tariff. Our farm leaders in Congress told us that the tariff would not substantially benefit the farmer. Mr. Coolidge, Mr. Hoover, and other Republican leaders opposed the McNary-Haugen bill because they said it was not sound economically. Mr. Coolidge vetoed the bill after advising with Mr. Hoover. We did not have enough votes in Congress to override the presidential veto.

The campaign of last fall came on and the farm revolt of the West against the Republican administration failed to materialize and the farm vote of the West went to Mr. Hoover.

When this Congress met in December our former farm leaders in Congress announced that they would forego the "equalization fee" provisions of the farm bill Mr. Coolidge recommended to Congress to give the farmers of the country relief at this session of Congress with a bill substantially the McNary-Haugen bill without the "equalization fee." The advice of the "silent statesman" fell on deaf ears in so far as the majority party leadership of this Congress was concerned.

We are advised by the majority party leadership that we should wait for the new Moses to lead depressed agriculture out from under bondage. That it is necessary to call the Congress in extraordinary session—to relieve the farmer—but at the same time to relieve the manufacturer by increasing tariff benefits.

As a result we are nearing the close of the present session of Congress with no efforts being made by the responsible leadership in Congress to give any aid to the farmer. Now, we are to await our new President and a new Congress in extra session. The farmer is promised relief at the extra session, but he must take his relief along with the manufacturer.

Our Ways and Means Committee of the House is holding daily hearings preparatory to an upward revision of the tariff. Every interest in the country now favored by the tariff is urging Congress to favor them by increasing tariff duties. We find our farm organizations appearing before the Ways and Means Committee urging that farm products also be favored by tariff duties.

The representative of the National Grange, appearing before the Ways and Means Committee, made this significant statement:

"Forty years ago we enunciated the policy of tariff for all or tariff for none."

The hearings before the Ways and Means Committee have taken a wide scope. The consumer has not been heard from to any appreciable extent. Many manufacturers have been heard to complain against placing a tariff on raw products.

The newly elected President has called the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate—the great exponent of high-tariff rates—to the balmy waters of the land of sunshine, flowers, and sail fishing, and the press intimates that the new leader has cautioned that we should be careful not to put too high a tariff wall around our country, for fear of retaliation on the part of foreign countries which buy our surplus agricultural products.

International bankers of this country overloaded with securities of foreign countries will probably be heard from later in respect to this general raising of tariff rates; possibly the consumer after the deviltment is all done, and it is too late to make any changes, may protest.

I am frank to confess to my farmer friends who are listening in to-night that the outlook does not seem encouraging, as I see it.

It is to be assumed that the extra session of Congress will put some of the agricultural products on the protective tariff lists. Whether this will give to the farmers any appreciable benefit as a whole is a debatable question.

Such a tariff expert as Representative CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee, in a statement before the Ways and Means Committee, a few day ago, gave the figures that such staple crops as corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, cotton, cottonseed, hay, and tobacco derive nominal tariff benefits or none at all. That about 19 truck products, a majority but not all of which do derive more or less tariff benefits. That of the 360,000,000 acres planted in the United States of all crops in 1928, that 334,347,000 acres of the value of $7,170,330,000 derived either nominal tariff benefits or none at all, and that 5,422,970 acres of truck crops of the value of $443,144,000 derived more or less tariff benefits.

So, after all, the great promised boon of the high protective tariff may not be so helpful to the farmer as a whole.

But in the outset of my remarks I promised that I would give you the facts and let you be the judge as to where the responsibility belonged for the failure of farm relief up to the present time.

I am devoutly praying that the promised relief will come with the ushering in of Mr. Hoover and his new administration. Ever since I have been in Congress I have voted and worked for farm relief. I expect to continue to do everything I can to this end.

And now a word to my North Carolina friends. Each and every one of you, I am sure, are proud that you live in such a great State. No matter what happens here in Congress, our State is still going to keep up the rapid pace of progress we have made and are making.

It certainly makes me feel proud when I am almost daily asked how it is that North Carolina has become the second State in the Union in the payment of Federal taxes. The record that we have made in the building of good roads, schools, industrial enterprises, and in all lines has brought us to the forefront.

I can only promise you that I shall strive faithfully to uphold the ideals of my great State as a Member of Congress.

Thanking you one and all who are listening in to-night, and especially my friends in North Carolina and of my own district and home town, including my son and daughter, I bid you good night.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 13, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.
